PREFACE

I take pleasure in presenting a second edition of the history of John and Ruth (Dudley) Whittelsey and their descendants, whose sons tilled the soil, fought for their country and honor, and served in their vocations with courage and faith, while their daughters developed splendid characters as daughters, wives, or mothers—all imbued with the principles of their parents on the subject of duty, a sentiment higher than ambition and of more public value. Special stress is laid on their faithful performance of duty, as it constitutes the leading characteristic of the family.

While none of these descendants have become famously rich, many have retired from business on a comfortable income, and with honor added to their name, which is of priceless value.

Previous to the year of 1896 I knew very little about the Whittlesey family, having been brought up in my grandfather Suydam's family, but, as I had married and expected to raise a family, I resolved to learn who my ancestors were. My first real find was a copy of the "Memorials of the Whittlesey Family in the United States," published by the Whittlesey Association in 1855, a work that was the result of untiring research and compiling of family records, which were found to be most accurate and valuable. It was the foundation well laid for all time by the Committee of Publication of the Whittlesey family, made up of Rev. John Smalley Whittlesey[716] of New Britain, Henry Newton Whittelsey[391] of New Haven, Charles Barnes Whittlesey[1419] of New Haven, and Henry Martyn Whittlesey[824] of New York, to whom all the descendants of John Whittelsey of Saybrook owe a debt of gratitude. From this point I found it quite easy to follow the different branches and to contact the various families, all of whom were very enthusiastic about bringing the genealogy up to date. This resulted in my completing the Whittlesey-Whittelsey genealogy and publishing it in 1898. During the past forty-three years I have continued to collect Whittlesey data and now find myself yielding to the desire of the descendants to publish a new edition.

The ancestral lines and all records herein given have been taken from the most reliable authorities available. Considerable variation will be noted in the spelling of the family name, especially in the early history. In using the forms Whittlesey and Whittelsey I have followed, as closely as possible, the source of the information. Some variation also occurs occasionally in given names. This is due to the fact that information obtained from several sources varied, and it was impossible to determine the correct form of the name. In such cases, both forms are listed in the index.

The military records have been procured from the United States government, the adjutant-generals of the different states, and the soldiers' respective families.

In the compilation of this work, the support and valuable assistance of many who are interested have been greatly appreciated, and to them I wish to express my deepest gratitude.

Charles Barney Whittelsey.

Hartford, Conn.,
July, 1941.

HOW TO USE THE GENEALOGY

1. Look in the Index for the name of the person whose records you wish to find, and find the number of that person. The Index has two main divisions, one listing persons named Whittlesey or Whittelsey, the second listing persons with other surnames.

2. Look in the book for that number (in either small or large figures). All numbers will be found at the left of the page. There is a small number for every person listed in the Index, since small numbers are records of births and run consecutively throughout the Genealogy. Letters are used in combination with some of these numbers so that descendants' records may appear in their proper relative position. Persons who married and had children that carried on the line also are given main entries in boldface type, introduced by large boldface numbers. These boldface entries are not always in consecutive order, so the small numbers should be consulted first. A plus sign (+) following a small number indicates that further information will be found in a corresponding main entry, or under a main entry for the husband or wife.

For example, you are looking for the record of Lieut. Col. Charles White Whittlesey of "Lost Battalion" fame. In the Index, you find his number to be 2431. Locating this in the list of small numbers in the text, you discover the data: *CHARLES WHITE, b. Jan. 20, 1844, at Florence, Wis.; d. Nov. 21, 1921, at sea. Among other children, he is the son of 1478 (in large figures) Frank Russell (Ebenezer Russell[665]), b. Aug. 28, 1858, at Danbury, Conn., etc.

As Charles White Whittlesey did not marry and have children, his records are concluded at this point. If he had married and had children who continued the line, he would have a plus sign (+) following his number, and his full record would be carried on in subsequent pages containing the next generation.

Following each main entry, in parentheses, is the name of the parent belonging to the Whittlesey line, and the small number after that name indicates the main boldface entry where data on this antecedent may be found.

3. Now to find his ancestral line. You see that his father was 1478 Frank Russell Whittlesey, who was the son of Ebenezer Russell Whittlesey[665], so you look up 1478 in small figures in the preceding pages in order to locate 665 Ebenezer Russell (Matthew Beale[303]).

Then you turn to a preceding page to find the records of 303 Matthew Beale, where you will find that he is the son of John [123]. Looking up 123 John, you find that he was the son of Eliphalet[41], and, by turning back further, that 41 Eliphalet was the son of Eliphalet[9]. The latter was the son of the progenitors 1 John and Ruth (Dudley) Whittelsey.

The surname has been omitted, beginning with the fourth generation, from the main entries in boldface type of all males bearing the name Whittelsey or Whittlesey. It has been included for all females bearing the name, and for all males and females having other surnames. No surnames are used in lists of children. In the spelling of names, the author has followed as closely as possible the sources of information.

An asterisk (*) indicates military service.

A dagger (†) following a number in a list of children indicates that further information will be found in memoranda immediately following.

WHITTELSEY-WHITTLESEY HERALDRY

Arms—Azure: a fess., ermine, between three escalop shells, Or. An Esquire hemlet on Shield.

Crest—Lion Rampant.

Motto—Animo et Fide (Courage and Faith).

"Heraldry has been defined as "The Shorthand of History," and the definition is a very happy one. In the early days when the forms used were few and simple, each man selected what he chose. and no general record was made." [F. E. Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A., "History, Principles, and Practice of Heraldry."]

The history of the Coat of Arms given in this work is brief. John Tully Whittlesey[186] brought it into this country early in the century, after expending much time and money in finding it. The original has been handed down to the family until it is now owned by Mrs. J. R. Coulter[1047], Chicago, Ill. At one time it was loaned, and by some accident the "key" was lost; in consequence we are deprived of very valuable information relative to the same. The original painting itself is about 9 × 12 inches in size, in a good state of preservation in 1898, of which the following is an explanation in detail:

Azure: "A beautiful color of ultra marine." "Which Blew coulor representeth the Aire amongst the elements, that of all the rest is the greatest fauorer of life, as the only nurse and maintainer of vitall spirits in any living creature." [John Ferne. "The Blazon of Gentrie," London, 1586.]

"The cullor of blew is commonly taken for the cleere sky, which appeareth so after the tempests be overblowne, and note prosperous success and good fortune to wearer in all his affayres. Azure of Arabic Lazur, denoting Justice. Often referred to in old books as caeruleus, cyaneus, and caesam." [Gerard Legh, "Accens of Armorie," 1562.]

Ermine: "Black spots or tails on white ground. The ermine as an unsullied purity, figures in the middle ages. In a portrait of Queen Elizabeth at Hatfield, an ermine is represented as running up her arm, as a delicate compliment to the royal lady. It was an old belief that the ermine would rather die than soil its fur. Hence the use of ermine for the nobility of the nation, a symbol of the purity and stainless honor that should be conspicuous in its wearers. Given to a judge, or denoting judicial power." [Encyclopedia Heraldica.]

"The Escallop Shell was the Pilgrims' ensign in their expeditions and pilgrimages to the holy places; also a symbol of the Apostle St. James. They were worn on their hoods and hats, and were of such a distinguishing character that Pope Alexander the IV., by a bull, forbade the use of them but to pilgrims who were truly noble." "The influence of the Crusaders may be seen by the escallop shell in some recognized positive order, so as to distinguish from those bearing similar arms." [H. Clark, "Clark's Heraldry," London.]

Or. "Gold. It doth lively represent that most excellent metal, the possession whereof enchanteth the hearts of fools and the colour whereof blindeth the eyes of the wise. Such is the worthiness of this colour that none shall bear the same but such as be of Royal Blood." [Force.]

The Esquire's Helmet is represented as of steel, the visor being closed, the helmet placed in profile. "Esquire, a title of Gentleman, the rank immediately below a Knight, originally a military office. Constituted by receiving a collar." [Jas. Parker, "Glossary of Terms Used in Heraldry," London, 1894.]

"Wherever the helmet is introduced the crest of the bearer is placed upon it." "Every British gentleman entitled to bear coat armour is noble, whether titled or not." [Lord Lindsay's "Life of the Lindsays."]

The Lion, Rampant. "The King of beasts, so that by the Lion is signified principallitie, dominion and rule; fortitude and magnanimity is denoted. Chosen to represent the greatest heroes, and who have been endued with such like qualities. This noble creature also represents command, subduing those that resist, and sparing those that humble themselves."

"The Lion on English arms is Golden."

The late Col. Charles C. Whittelsey[870] in his notes says "The Whittelsey seal is a shield, two of the quarterings the lower, being Bishop's miters: the upper left hand one a Maltese cross, the upper right hand one a sun-burst. The upper quarterings refer to the Crusaders, the lower half belongs to the Bishop of Rochester, Peterborough, and Canterbury." "The crest of the shield is a Maltese cross, with the motto, 'Animum Rege' (The Kingdom of the Mind)."

HISTORICAL MATERIAL PERTAINING TO THE NAME WHITTLESEY

(NOTE.—In the following historical matter, abstracted from many sources, the author has retained all variations in the spelling of names as used in the original documents.)

Whittlesey, a village and once a market town, Whitlesea, containing parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary, which form a union in the hundred of North Witchford, Isle of Ely, County of Cambridge, 6 miles from Peterborough, with 6,874 inhabitants (in 1845). This place, called Witesie in the Doomsday book (The Great Survey of England of William the Conquerer, A.D. MLXXXVI, commenced in 1084 and finished in 1086; printed 1767) is supposed to have been a Roman station, from the traces of a military way and the numerous relics of antiquity discovered in the neighborhood.

The village, which is bounded on the north and south by branches of the river Nene, is large and respectable; although Market held on Friday has been for some years discontinued, the market house still remains (see photograph).

There is a fair for horses on June 13, and at the "Falcon" the courts leet and baron occur twice a year; also a court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40 s. A public library and newsroom has been established by subscription.

THE "WHITTLESEY REPORTER" OF WHITTLESEY, ENGLAND

Adjoining this place but in the County of Huntingdon is an expanse of water termed Whittlesey Mere, abounding with a variety of fish. The lake is 8¾ miles in circumference, fed by the waters of a large tract of country. Its importance and antiquity are shown in the Doomsday Book and by its having been granted as early as A.D. 664 by King Mercia to his new Monastery of Medishamsted, now Peterborough.

In 1870 it reverted to the Crown; several grants were made of it by different Kings, and Charles II in 1662 conferred on Edward, Earl of Sandwich, the office of Keeper of Whittlesey Mere.

The living of St. Andrews is a discharged vicarage, valued in the King's books at £4.13.4; and in patronage of the Crown net income £62; impropriator's, Earl Waldergrave and others. The Church (St. Andrews; see illustration) is a handsome structure with a stately tower crowned by turrets.

The living of St. Mary's is a fine edifice with a lofty tower of peculiar elegance, surmounted by a slender enriched spire of good proportions, which was built in the twelfth century (see illustration).

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, WHITTLESEY, ENGLAND, BUILT IN THE TWELFTH CENTURY

There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Calvanistic Methodists; also two endowed Schools, one founded in 1735 by Adam Kelfull and endowed with £27 per annum; the other, 1815 by John Sudbury, £20 a year.

William de Wittlesey, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here in 1300.

Samuel Lewis, "Topographical Dictionary of England," 1845, London, Vol. IV, pp. 548–549.

Whittlesey Mere covers 1570 acres. It is no modern creation, for we find it granted in 664 by Wolphen, King of Mercia, to his new monastery of Mede Hampstead (Peterborough) destroyed by the Danes in 876. [Edinborough Review, 1848.]

"Whittlesea Dyke. Whittlesea Field. Whittlesea Mere, Huntingtonshire, the largest inland lake in England, was drained by order of King Alfred the Great," [Cassell's British Atlas, No. 13.]

Whittlesey-sea Urban, district, market town, and parish, with railway station, G. E. R. Cambridgeshire, in northwest of county, 5¼ miles east of Peterborough. Urban district and parish, 361 acres; population 3,909. Postoffice, town office. Market day Friday. Whittlesey, known at Doomsday as Witesie, has two churches, two endowed schools, a town hall, public library, etc.

QUEEN STREET, WHITTLESEY, ENGLAND; WORLD WAR MEMORIAL

Whittlesey Mere, 4 miles southwest of the town, was drained in the year A.D. 183 but has since re-formed.

Whittlesey Rural, parish adjoining above 25,819 acres; population 3194.

Whittlesford parish, urban village, railway station, G. E. R. Cambridgeshire, in south of county; parish 1,976 acres; population 785; village 8 miles south of Cambridge; post office, town office. William Wesley in 1723 bequeathed lands and £50 a year for a school for the teaching of children.

Nearby is Whittlesford Hall Seat.

At Whittlesford Bridge are now the remains of an hospital said to have been founded before the time of Edward I by William Calvill, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

J. G. Bartholomew, F.R.S.E.; F.R.G.S. ["Gazetteer of the British Isles," 1904, p. 848.]

"The lands given to Peterborough (which are minutely specified in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle), at its foundation in 1657, by King Wulfers of Mercia (Son-in-law to Anna of East Anglia), comprised Whittlesea and the adjoining fens." [Edward Conybeare, "History of Cambridgeshire," London, 1897, p. 49.]

"Whittlesey is an island of glacial deposit in the Fenland. . . . The most densely populated part of Cambridshire is its Fenland, which comprises most of the Isle of Ely. The northwest around Whittlesey has a density of 200 to 250 people per 100 acres. Whittlesey is surrounded by reclaimed Fenland." [Bycott, "Eastern England," pp. 119–325.]

Whittlesey-sea, exclusively of the town, is divided into five districts called Estrey, Cotes, Eldernal, Willow Hall, and Glassmore.

HIGH STREET, WHITTLESEY, ENGLAND

At Eldernal there was a Chapel consecrated in 1525, long since dilapidated; at Glassmore were found about the year 1742 several Roman lamps of red ware.

In this work there is a very good picture of the west view of St. Mary's Church at Whittlesea in 1808.

[Rev. David Lysons and Samuel Lysons, "Magna Britannia, a Concise Topographical Account of Several Counties of Great Britain," Vol. II, London, 1810.]

In the Term Reports, Vol. IV, p. 207, there is a reported case of the King against the inhabitants of Whittlesea-Whittlesey, Cambridgeshire.

The Society of Genealogists of London, 5 Bloomsbury Square, W. C. I., George Sherwood, Hon. Treasurer, announces that the society holds a large collection of notes and copies from Whittlesey Manor court rolls and other records. These are contained in fourteen manuscripts, books and some hundreds of loose sheets, and much material is indexed for easy reference. They are marked "D. Mss. 242–257." This announcement was made in October, 1935, through the University Library, Cambridge, England.

"Cambridgeshire," the Capital and seat of the University, 49 miles North of London. The north part of the shire is a vast marsh or "mere" on a level with the North Sea, with coarse grass and bogs. It is partially reclaimed by ditches and canals, one of which is called "Bedford Canal." Here and there are dry knolls called "eys" or islands of solid land, on which are hamlets and Churches. For natural drainage, there are three sluggish streams, the "Ouse," the "New," and the "Com," which discharge into the swash. There are three hamlets on the "eys," known as "Thomsey," "Ramsey," and

CHURCH STREET, WHITTLESEY, ENGLAND

"Whittlesey." There is also on the "Com," the eastern boundary of the shire, a "Whittles ford." [Penny Cyclopedia, Cambridgeshire, p. 179.]

Whittlesea Mere is an extensive piece of water about 5 miles in length, between 2 and 3 miles in breadth. This clear lake, says Camden, "extends itself in a very funny part of the country; but the inhabitants reckon that the thickness of the are is compensated by the advantages of the fishery, the plentiful pasturage and the quantity of the turf, so fit for firing."

King Canute (the Dane, chosen king 1017–1035; divided England into four great earldoms) ordered the fen to be parceled out among the several towns upon it, by Turkell, who lived here among the East Angles, and invited his father, Sweyn King of Denmark, over to ravage England. He divided it in such a manner that each town had such a proportion of the fen for its own use as each town had firm land abutting on the opposite fen. He also ordained that no township should dig or mow without leave in the fen belonging to another, and that they should all have a common right of pasturage; that is, horn under horn, in order to maintain peace and harmony among them. This Mere is occasionally agitated with wind in a violent manner. Holland says, "It doth sometimes in calms and faire weather sodianly rise tempestuously, as it were, into violent water quakes, to the danger of the poore fishermen, by reason, as some thinke, of evaporations breaking violently out of the bowels of the earthe."

In February, 1739–40, this mere was so frozen over that two prizes were run for on it.

[Brayley, "Huntingtonshire."]

"The Church of Colne" in Somersham, St. Ives, Huntondonshire, was dedicated to St. Helen, and appears to have been erected about the time of Henry III, 1216–72. It was the church home of many families of the name Whittlesea. The records of their births, marriages, and deaths are intact in the Church records. Friday morning, Apr. 24, 1896, the Church was reduced to a state of ruin by the falling of the tower. There was a sitting room for 200 people. The register dates from the year 1665 (see photograph).

William Whittlesea led a folorn hope at the Siege of Acre. In 1187 he followed the King to Acre in the vain hope of rescuing Our Saviour's tomb from the Jews. He was one of about 50 men who withstood the famine and fire and water and returned to England with his King, by whom he was knighted in 1190. This Crusade rescued the tomb of Our Saviour and made it free to the entire world.

William Whittlesea fell in battle in 1192.

The original records of these facts were furnished from the papers of Col. Charles Chauncey Whittelsey[870] of St. Louis, Mo., and have not been authenticated, although great effort has been made to secure the facts from the Dean of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in London. The above information was quoted as from General Lord Wapier, Magdala, and Hon. John S. Mac Donald.)

In a description of the queen's tour some years ago, the Whittlesea Yeomanry of Cambridgeshire attended the queen. They also appeared in London, upon the occasion of the queen's marriage and of her coronation, in the uniform worn at the time of the Crusaders, carrying their pikes, halferds, and tattered banners.

In the Fennland Notes and Queries, a magazine, first and second volumes, there are references to the Train Band at Whittlesea in 1716 (Vol. 1, p. 96) and to the Whittlesey Volunteer Infantry in 1806 (vol. 2, p. 401).

In the seventh volume of Fennland Notes and Queries, there is an account of the election of the Abbot of Thorney in 1464. Amongst the Monks present was a William Wittlesey, Prior of Depyng. "Brother Wittlesey made proclamation at doors of the Church and Cloister for all to appear who had a right in election."

An Elizabethian parchment dated 1573, the fifteenth year of the reign of Elizabeth, Queen of England, daughter of Henry VIII and Ann Boleyn, who ascended to the throne in 1558, is in the possession of Mrs. Ora Maconda Whittlesey (Sterry) Waterman[2989] (Mrs. Edgar M. Waterman of Jeanereth La.) in which the name Whittlesey appears. The entire document is written in Latin and has not been interpreted so as to determine fully its identity.

Several attempts have been made to photograph the document. The results were not sufficiently successful to enable it to be read. Therefore this record is made of its existence in the hope that at some future time its identity may be fully determined.

WILLIAM WHITTELSEY 1300–1374

Extract from "A Biographical Register of Peterhouse Men. . . ," by T. A. Walker, Cambridge, 1927

Pt 1, p. 12 [1349] Sept. 10. William de Whittlesea, Archdeacon of Huntingdon 1337, was admitted Master.

LL.D. (Utriusque Juris Professor).
57th Lord Archbishop of Canterbury 1368–74.
Dies 5 June 1374. Buried at Canterbury.

His mother was a sister of Simon Islip, Archbishop of Canterbury 1349–66. As a native of the Fen Country he might well begin his education at Cambridge. He is in fact said to have successively studied at Peterhouse, at Oxford and at Avignon. Under his uncle's advice he devoted himself especially to Civil and Canon Law, and his acquirements therein soon opened for him a gateway to high promotion. Quondam officialis domini archidiaconi Eliensis, he was himself advanced to the Archdeaconry in July 1337. In 1348 he was resident in Cambridge, having on June 1 licence for service at his house there during infirmity. Reg. of Bp. T. de Insula; E.D.R. 1893, p. 14.

Prebendary of Stotfold in Lichfield Cathedral 20 Aug. 1350, R. of Ivychurch the same year, R. of Croydon 1353 (collated by Archbishop Islip), Prebendary of Lincoln 1356 and in the same year, if not already in Jan. 1353, Prebendary of Chichester, R. of Cliffe 30 April 1359 (by exchange for Croydon with Adam de Houghton, afterwards Bishop of S. David's), also Vicar General of Canterbury and Dean of Arches, he was 6 Feb. 1361/2 consecrated Bishop of Rochester. Translated to Worcester 6 March 1363/4, he was in 1368 (by Bull dated 11 October) advanced to the Primacy in succession to Simon Langham, who had resigned. He was "an excellent Scholar, an eloquent Preacher." He founded 1371/2 a Chantry at Harbledown, Kent. He obtained the Bull which exempted the University of Oxford from Episcopal jurisdiction. His health apparently failed soon after his promotion to the Archbishopric. He was as Archbishop "most of the time troubled with a tedious lingering disease."

Resigning the Peterhouse Mastership in 1351, he retained a lively affection for the College. Under his last Will, dated 5 June 1374, he bequeathed to the College Library his books of Civil and Canon Law, of Divinity and kindred subjects, with a request for the prayers of the Society. Four of the books given by him are identified by inscriptions. Three are still in the Library, viz. "Bartholomaeus super Decreta," "Biblia Sacra" and "Dictionarium Hugutionis." The fourth, "Quintiliani declamationum liber, Petri Blesensis Epistolae CLI," is in the Library of S. John's College ex dono William Beale (Master of S. John's 1633–44). How did William Beale acquire with a good conscience "liber Willelmi de Cantuar. relictus Collegio Cantab"? In two of these MSS it may be remarked William de Whittlesea is modestly described as "quondam officialis domini archidiaconi Eliensis," in a third as Bishop of Worcester, "quondam electus in magistrum domus."

In the Chancel Window of Little S. Mary's formerly was the inscription "Orate pro anima bone memorie Wilelmi de Wittleseye dudum Episcopi Roffensis." Blomefield's Collect. 218. The use of the lower title might seem to suggest a benefaction by the Bishop, possibly the introduction of the window, before his final advancement to the Archiepiscopal office; but it may be that the inscription preserved by Blomefield was incomplete.

The provision of the Archbishop's Will concerning Peterhouse is printed by Nicholas Battely (himself of Peterhouse) as an Appendix (No. xiiia) to his Cantuaria Sacra. DNB.; Harwood's Lichfield 247; Stubbs, Episc. Succ.; Weever, Fun. Mon. 26; Le Neve, Fasti i. 19, 626; ii. 50, 106, 563; iii. 58, 667; Leland, iv. 119; James, Cat. of Peterhouse MSS. 35, 64, 111, 357; Arch. Cant. xv. 228.

The following records have been extracted from Cambridgeshire Church and Court Registers:

Ralph Whittlesey, b. 1272, m. ———. His children were:

S. D. Kershaw, M. A., Librarian at Lambeth Palace, 1896–97. Correspondence.

William Whittelsey, LL.D., b. 1300, in the town or borough of Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, England. He was educated at Cambridge University, and attended Oxford University, which was founded by his uncle Simon Islip (Archbishop of Canterbury, 1349–1366). He returned to Cambridge as Third Master or Custus of Peter House in 1340. By the advice of his uncle, Simon Islip, he studied canon law, and became a pupil in the Papal Courts of Arigeron, Rome. Was appointed "Judge of the Court of Arches," Rector of Croyden and Cliff, Archdeacon of Huntingdon, 1357. While Archdeacon of Huntingdon he sat in judgment in the celebrated case of Thomas de Lisle, Bishop of Ely. William Whittlesey was made Dean of the Arches during the reign of King Edward the III, for whom he was private secretary.

Principal Probate Registry, Somerset House, London, W. C. Correspondence, 1896–97.

William Whittelsey, Archdeacon of Huntingdon, Warden of Peterhouse, Cambridge, was elected 23d Oct., 1360, confirmed by the Pope (jure provisionis) ii cal. August (31st July) 1361. (In a document relative to the marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Countess of Kent, dated Oct., 1361, this bishop is thus addressed, "Willeelmo de Whitleseye Roffensi ecclesiarum auctoritate apostolica electis confermatis"), received the spiritualities from the Archbishop on the 18th of Nov. and the temporalities the 13th of Dec. in the same year and was consecrated on the 6th of Feb., 1365. He was translated to Worcester. He was consecrated by his uncle the 48th Bishop of Rochester, Feb. 6, 1361. Translated and became the 55th Bishop of Worcester. He was appointed 57th Archbishop of Canterbury by King Edward III; recommended by the Monks of Christ's church and by a Papal Bull, dated Oct. 11, 1368; crowned metropolitan and primate of all England, who stood next to the Pope in Romish hierarchy. William Whittlesey left at Oxford more than signal testimony of his affection. He freed it from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of London. He was esteemed an erudite scholar, an eloquent preacher, and his last sermon was most remarkable, to the convocation, on the text "The truth shall make you free." It seems by the story that in the sermon he had a particular reflection on the privileges of the clergy, as exempted, by preaching the truth, from payment of taxes, save with their own consent. But all would not serve their term; for, in the contemporary parliament, the clergy, unwittingly willing, granted yearly tenth, to supply the pressing occasions of King Edward III.

The Bishop of Dover. Hon. Chapter Librarian, Canterbury. Correspondence, 1896.

He appointed his kinsman, Ralph Whittlesey, his chamberlain, and inherited many books from his kinsman William Whittlesey, these he bequeathed to Peter House at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. His library is still in existence, the catalogue of which is in MSS. at St. Peter's College. The Archbishop's arms and seal is described under "Whittelsey-Whittlesey Heraldry." His attachment to his family was one of the traits of his character; he decided therefore all the residue of his property should be divided among his poor relations and bequeathed to his kinsman Ralph one hundred works; to his chapel at Whittlesea he left his vestments. Having suffered from the effects of a procrastinated disease, this primate died at Lambeth Palace, Jan. 3, 1374, after presiding for five years over the See of Canterbury. He was buried at Canterbury under a marble tomb inlaid with brass, over against his uncle Simon Islip, between two pillars on the south side of the body of the church, "upper part of the nave of Canterbury cathedral," which with his epitaph is "altogether defaced, the brass worne, torne, or stolen away;" these few words only remaining, " . . . tumulutus Whittlesey natus gemmata luce. . . . Translation of the Will of Archbishop Wittlesey, June 13, 1374

In the name of the undivided Trinity Amen. I William Wittlesey, Archbishop of Canterbury, make my testament or my last will as follows. First I commend my soul to my redeemer and to the blessed Virgin Mary and to blessed Thomas the glorious martyr and to all the rest of the Saints of God. I dispose of my wretched body to be buried in some part of my church, which my executors and friends shall think suitable to be the place of my burial. I commend the administration of all my goods, wherever they be, to my executors named below, imploring them as those in whom I put my trust above all other mortals to be willing to undertake this administration of their charity, in such a way however that before all else my debts may be fully paid, and the residue be used for the good of my soul, as my said executors shall think fit. And also that all my books of

Given in our manor of Lambeth on the 5th day of June in the year of our Lord 1374, and in the sixth year of our translation (i.e., his translation from the see of Worcester to that of Canterbury).

The Archbishop was "Custos" of Peterhouse, a Cambridge College from 1349 to 1351.

No wonder he speaks of his "wretched body," because soon after becoming Archbishop he became a confirmed invalid and rarely left his quiet refuge at Oxford. When he did once go up to London for a ſign, he procur'd leave of the Pope to tax the Clergy of his Dioceſs four Pence in every Mark, which his Collectors enlarg'd to a tenth; thus by degrees he recover'd his See to a conſiderable Eſtate, and was very ſtrict in ſtanding up for the Rights of it. The Year after his Election, he procur'd, in favour of the Clergy, upon the King's preſenting to Livings, the Biſhops in Caſe of Quare non admiſit, and the Clergy's exemption from Secular Judges; but then he, on the other hand, took care to direct the Puniſhment of ſuch Clerks Convicts in ſuch a manner of Severity as exceeded what the Laws would have, enjoyning ſuch as Impriſonment during Life, with mean Diet, &c. He Publiſh'd ſeveral uſeful Edicts, as obſerving Sunday; and did many publick ſpirited things, as Founding Canterbury-College in Oxford, now part of (a) Chriſt's-Church; vindicating his Metropolitan Privileges againſt the Archbiſhop of York: He gave to the Convent the Churches of Eaſtry and Monkton, and left to his Church one thouſand Sheep, his rich Veſtments, and a great quantity of Plate: He was Excommunicated by the Pope, upon account of Biſhop Lylde of Ely. He is ſaid to have ſold and made away with the Church-Revenues; and in January, as he was riding from his Palace at Otteford to Maghfield, between Sevenoak and Tunbridge, he fell from his Horſe into a Miry-Place and was wet, but he rode on without changing his Clothes, and coming to Maghfield, about Noon, he laid him to ſleep in the Stone-Chamber, and was ſtricken with a Palſy, that after Dinner he could ſcarce ſpeak. About the Middle of July, 1363. he road with tolerable eaſe in a Litter to Cherynge; thus he continu'd for ſome Time, being able to travel between Cherynge and Canterbury, till at length, about Auguſt, he went to Maghfield, and continu'd there the ſpace of one Year and an half (a); and he died at Maghfield on Sunday in Craſtin. St. Marc. viz. 6 Cal. May, 1366. about Midnight, and on Sunday the 2d of May, he was, as himſelf had order'd, buried with great Privacy and ſmall Expence, before the great Croſs in the Nave of the Church: He appointed a perpetual Chauntry for himſelf and thoſe that were, or ſhould be, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, in which this Oration was daily to be us'd.

His Tomb is on the North-ſide the Nave of the Church, being a long Table rais'd two Foot about the Pavement, between the ſpace of two Pillars; it has been inlaid with Braſs, but is now defac'd, as is the Epitaph which was thus.

Arms of Archbishop Wittlesey

The arms are described heraldically as "Or a saltire azure." That is to say, the field of the shield is gold, with a saltire or St. Andrew's cross blue. These arms appear on a shield in the roof of the cloister here, which was finished in the year 1414. ["Heraldic Notices of Canterbury Cathedral," Thomas Willement, London, 1827. Compartment 21, No. 394.]

The arms are given as belonging to Archbishop Wittlesey in Papworth, "Ordinary of British Armorials," London, 1874, under the word "Saltire."

The arms are also given in Archbishop Mathew Parker, "De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae," Hanover, 1605. An earlier edition was published in London by John Day in 1572.

FROM THE

CANTERBURY JOURNAL,

Of TUESDAY, February 27, 1787.

To the Printer of the CANTERBURY JOURNAL.

SIR,

I Read with pleaſure the article in your laſt paper reſpecting the intended improvements in the nave of the Cathedral, and for the entertainment of ſuch part of your readers as are fond of antiquity, I have made ſome obſervations.

On removing the preſent pavement, at a ſmall diſtance from the tomb of Archbiſhop Iſlip was found a ſtone coffin, or cyſt, (the lid of which was ſuppoſed to be ſtolen at the reformation) fitted to the ſhape of the human body, like the following ſketch.

The Dimenſions.	feet.	inches.
Cavity of the head	1	11
Breadth of the ſhoulders	2	0
Breadth at the feet	1	3
Length within from ſhoulder to feet	6	3
From out to out	6	10
Depth of the coffin	0	10½

I have no doubt (though ſome imagine this cannot be Iſlip's grave, as ſtone coffins were of much earlier date, and therefore then out of uſe) that this curious coffin contains the remains of Archbiſhop Iſlip, who died in 1366, and according to Somner was buried in the middle of the body at the upper end, inclining to the north ſide, under a fair tomb of marble, which was afterwards removed and placed between two pillars, where it remained till taken down laſt week. The bones had been diſturbed, the ſkull much broken, and lying upon the breaſt, but the teeth nearly perfect,

On the ſouth ſide of the nave, between two pillars, under a large raiſed tomb, were found the remains of Archbiſhop Wittelſey, who died in the year 1374. He was buried in the ſolid foundation, cut out partly in the ſhape of a coffin; the ſkeleton was entire; the body had been lain in wood aſhes; a leaden ſeal of a Papal Bull of Indulgence was found near the hand, and is now in the poſſeſſion of the Rev. Dr. Berkeley, Vice Dean; a copy of which is here given.

I am, Sir,

GEOGRAPHICAL DATA PERTAINING TO THE NAME WHITTLESEY

Whittlesea, Cape of Good Hope, South Africa, is a small picturesque village 22 miles south of Queenstown, nestling among the hills and fine old oaks, with a hotel at the foot of the Katberg on the

MEMORIAL PANEL AND BUST OF SIR HARRY G. W. SMITH

Klipaat River, whose early history is closely associated with the Kaffir Wars. It is situated at an altitude of 3240 feet and has a white population of 161. Founded in 1836, it was named after the birthplace of Sir Harry G. W. Smith, Baronet of Aliwal, Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, England. The date of Sir Harry Smith's birth was June 28, 1788. He died in London, Oct. 12, 1860, and is buried in the town of his birth, where a memorial panel and bust in St. Andrew's Church record his history.

Sir Harry Smith was governor and commander in chief of Cape of Good Hope from 1847 to 1852. He was knighted, Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, and colonel of the First Brigade. He entered the British Army, 95th Regiment, 1805, and served in South America, Spain, Portugal, France, Regiment North America, Netherlands, India, and the Cape of Good Hope.

Whittlesea sustained attacks from the natives and rebel Hottentots in 1850–52, but all these attacks were repulsed by the small European population. During the Hottentot rebellion a tunnel was driven from the besieged village to a near-by river for the water supply. The tunnel can be seen today.

Today Whittlesea is a happy village. Surrounding farmers make it the center of their sport and social functions; it is also the administrative headquarters for the native locations. The government has just erected a large modern building for offices.

Although the European population is very small, Whittlesea has two churches, a library, post office, hotel, two shops, a garage, a police force, and a school. Most of the English people are direct descendants of the 1820 settlers and many bear their names.

The nearest railway station is Queenstown (named after Queen Victoria) on the railway line from East London to Johannesburg. The nearest big city, port, airway, and station is East London, 130 miles away. The Postmaster is Mrs. A. I. Howse.

Whittlesea, Victoria, Australia, is located just 25 miles north of Melbourne, the capital of Victoria, and is nestled at the foot of the Plenty Ranges, part of the Great Dividing Range. It is at the terminus of the railway from Melbourne and has a population of about 1000 persons. It possesses a post office, public hall, free library, Masonic temple, four churches, court house, slate school, hotels, and places of business. Whittlesea is a farming area, producing mostly cattle, milk and cream, lambs and wool in great abundance. It is also a great apple-growing district and supplies many foreign countries with the delicious and tempting fruit.

The district was first settled in 1837 when George Sherwin came to Port Phillips and took up a large acreage of land along the Plenty River. George Sherwin was born in Paramatta, near South Wales, in 1819 and was one of four brothers, William, George, John, and Thomas, whose descendants are still resident in this district. In 1838 Robert Hoddle, who laid out the City of Melbourne, surveyed it into allotments, the district around Whittlesea then known as the Parish of Toorowrrong. The first sale of land took place in Sydney, N.S.W., May 8, 1839. Victoria was a part of New South Wales until 1851, when it was declared to be a state.

George Sherwin occupied an area of about 795 acres although no record of its purchase could be found. Thomas Wills purchased 13,979 acres at 15 shillings per acre. Other lots of 640 acres were sold for £384 cash. The land at that time was heavily timbered.

In 1853, the village reserve was divided into allotments by assistant surveyor Robert Mason, who named this allotment "Whittlesea" after the town of Whittlesea, Cambridgeshire, England, where he once lived.

[This information and pictures were furnished by Mr. J. C. Gibbs, who is postmaster of Whittlesea, Victoria, Australia.]

Whittlesey, Medina County, Ohio

Whittlesey, a village in the township of Lafayette, Medina County, Ohio, is shown on the Medina, Ohio, section of the United States Geodetic Topographic Map. This village was brought to the author's attention by Harvey Stuart Gibbs[3027-28b], who visited the village in 1940 while making an investigation of oil and gas wells about two miles from the town.

The population of Whittlesey, Ohio, is about fifty families, and there are four churches. A personal survey is being made to try to find the origin of the village and its connection with the Whittlesey Family.

WHITTLESEY, TAYLOR COUNTY, WISCONSIN

The town of Whittlesey, Wisconsin, in 1939 consists of 27 inhabitants (in 1898, the then postmaster informed me that he could tell me nothing about the origin of the town and that they then had 97 inhabitants). They have a store, tavern, post office, blacksmith shop, a potato warehouse, and a tramway for loading logs and pulpwood. It is located in a rough country, full of swamps and hills, with some good farming land interspersed. There is a glacial moraine, part of which is directly behind the post office. Near by there are thousands of acres of Federal Game Reserve which include many places set aside for recreation. The Civilian Conservation Corps has made many good roads through the forest, built dams, cleared out springs, and made picnic grounds by the lakes with fishing grounds and bathing beaches.

In 1873, the Wisconsin Central Railroad, which is now a division of the "Soo Line," was built there, running between Chicago and Minneapolis, the junction being at Spencer, Wis. The town of Whittlesey is on the railroad between Ashland, Wis., and Spencer, Wis., in the extreme northeastern part of Wisconsin.

At that time the president of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Co. was a Massachusetts man who was influential in having the towns named after those in Massachusetts—such as Medford, which is the next town south, and Chelsea, which is the next town north.

In June, 1854, Asaph and Lucy Maria (Haskell) Whittlesey[698] traveled by wagon from Tallmadge, Ohio, (and Peoria, Ill., where they were married in 1851) to La Pointe, Ashland County, Wisconsin, and made the first improvements upon the site of the now flourishing town of Ashland, Wis. He built the first log cabin and afterward the first house in the place (which was standing in 1898). He was the first postmaster and first justice of the peace in Ashland. He was afterward elected judge of the county of Ashland, and in 1860 he was elected a member of the legislature, to represent the counties of Ashland, Burnett, Douglas, LaPointe, Polk, and St. Croix. He walked 160 miles to Madison on snow shoes and camped out at night in the unsettled portion of his route. In 1861, President Lincoln appointed him receiver of the land office in Bayfield, to which place he removed.

In 1858, his brother Col. Charles Whittlesey[693], a graduate of West Point, civil engineer, who served in the 5th U. S. Infantry at Ft. Gratiot and Green Bay, Wis., was engaged by the United States government to make a geological survey of the state of Wisconsin. It was largely on the basis of this survey that this state was developed and the railroads established and built. The town of Whittlesey was started in 1873 as a mill town, which grew to have a population of over 200 souls and was named for the pioneer Asaph Whittlesey.

The population of the town of Whittlesey, Wis., is made up principally of German families. Within the past few years, the mill burned down, and there was not enough timber to pay to rebuild it. Consequently the town has just naturally grown smaller and smaller until it now has only 27 inhabitants.

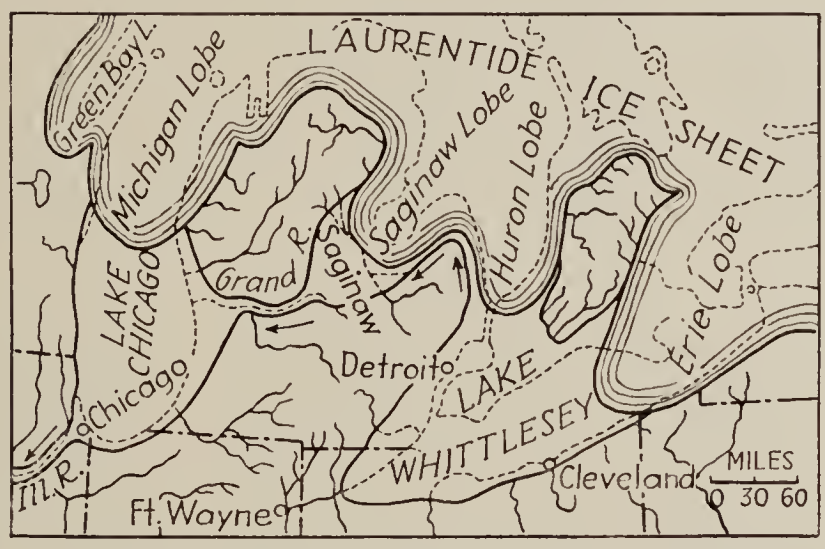
The U. S. Post Office Department in Washington, D. C., informed me that the post office at Whittlesey, Wis., was established May 18, 1882. I am greatly indebted to the present postmistress, Mrs. Elizabeth Giles, for all the local information relative to the town, which has assisted me in establishing definitely that the town is named for Asaph Whittlesey and his brother Col. Charles Whittlesey who were prominent pioneers of Wisconsin.

Extract from Survey of Col. Charles Whittlesey[693]

There is quite indisputable evidence that, not many thousand years ago, a great ice sheet spread over northeastern America.

These ice sheets, quite like those now covering Greenland and the Artic Continent, have been called the continental glaciers of the Glacial Period.

Before the Glacial Period, Labrador, Scandinavia, and other centers from which the ice spread were very cold, and the lands were higher than they are now, and one theory is that this former elevation caused great ice sheets to form and move down into the United States.



ENLARGEMENT OF THE GLACIAL LAKES

(From Ralph S. Tarr and O. D. von Engeln, "New Physical Geography," The Macmillan Company.)

In the United States an ice sheet from Labrador joined forces with ice sheets from Adirondack and New England mountains and spread over hill and valley, slowly and irresistibly, as the ice sheet of Greenland does. It advanced southward to a zone where melting became so great that it could go no farther. After many thousand years the climate gradually changed, perhaps because the land was lowered. Then the ice front slowly melted back, or "retreated."

In some places, the ice stood in large lakes formed where north-flowing streams were dammed by ice. The diagram shows the enlargement of the glacial lakes as the ice melted from the St. Lawrence basin. The eastern lake Whittlesey drained into Lake Chicago.

THE "WHITTELSEY EXPRESS" STAMP, 1857–1858

Prior to the issuance of United States government adhesive postage stamps, and for some time thereafter, letters were mailed "collect" or postage was prepaid in cash. In such instances, the "covers" or envelopes often bear, in addition to the town postmark, notations such as "Paid," "Paid 10," etc.

In 1842, the firm of Hawley & Co. established and operated the first "express service," from Buffalo to Chicago, which subsequently changed hands, and the new firm of Pomeroy & Co. started Pomeroy's Express in June, 1844, an independent mail route. By subsequent changes the firm became the Wells Fargo Express Company. This independent mail service was dependent upon the stage and steamboat, which were subject to delays due to the weather, bad roads, and the vicissitudes of the pioneer days. In spite of these very unfavorable conditions and the moderate charges made by them for carrying the mail, the practice of organizing independent local letter express companies increased and prospered for a time until the U. S. Government Post Office Department was organized. As the latter became more efficient, reduced its rates, and effected needed reforms in the service, it legislated these private posts out of business in 1859.

It was during the height of success in the express letter or local stamp-carrying period (1857–58) that we find listings in the Chicago Directory that a Whittelsey & Company operated a "city post" at No. 7 Exchange Building (which appears to have been No. 194 Lake Street). The only names known in connection with the post are Edmund A. Whittelsey [1016] and Samuel M. Whittelsey[1017].

The company adopted and used a stamp, roughly printed, as if from a wood block, on red wool paper, with the left profile of Washington in an oval with the figure 2, strongly shaded, located in the lower part of the oval at the point of Washington's neck. Above and following the lines of the oval are the words "Whittelsey's Express." Under the oval and under the 2 is the word "Cents."

(The accompanying illustrations are from photographs by Clarence Hennan, M.D., of Chicago, Ill., A.P.S. No. L269-4849, who has so kindly furnished the basic material for this interesting subject, and who at present is the sole possessor of one of the original Whittelsey express stamps, cancellations, counterfeits, etc. The Whittelsey-Whittlesey families are also indebted to Mr. Hugh M. Clark, president of Scott Publications, Inc., who presented one of the counterfeit Whittelsey express stamps, which led me on the mission to determine how it originated, why it was counterfeited, and what Whittelseys established the express business.)

At this time, 1857–58, it was not illegal for individuals to establish private posts for the delivery of mail within the city, from the post office to the addressee, and to use a stamp and a canceller. The head of Washington was used on this stamp, since almost any design could be used. In the 1870's, stamp collectors were after these specimens, and, since there were so few of these stamps used, many counterfeits were made. Some of our stamp dealers had these counterfeits made in England and used them in making up packets of "local" stamps.

There were no reissues of Whittelsey Express Stamps. There is record of the counterfeit being made in London and disposed of by dealers there, but the counterfeits have never been known to be used.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF ORIGINAL STAMP AND COUNTERFEITS OF IT

What is said to be the only known specimen of the postmark is illustrated. This was drawn from the copy in the collection of Dr. Hennan and was in blue ink.

In the designs of the counterfeit stamps we find the following changes:

First, the profiles of Washington are very inferior and crude.

The apostrophe is omitted after the "Y" of "Whittelsey's."

The figure 2 on the original is strongly shaded. On the first counterfeit it is of similar shape but solid, the "S" of Whittelsey's" is smaller than the original, and the pupil of Washington's eye is in the lower corner, making it appear that he is looking backward over his shoulder. (Type L278 illustration in the United States stamp specialized catalog of the Scott Stamp & Coin Company, 1938, p. 307.)

The second counterfeit has an open figure 2 and the portrait of Washington is also very poor.

Dr. Hennan also illustrates a third Whittelsey express stamp of an entirely different design. The portrait might be that of one of the Mr. Whittelsey's of the firm. The "S" is left out of the name, and no further record is known of it.

The proprietors of the company were: Edmund A. Whittelsey[1016], b. Feb. 12, 1834, in Log Harbor, Long Island, was the son of William Whittelsey, sea captain and merchant in New York City. He married and went West. We find him listed in the Chicago, 1857–58, Directory as living at 238 Madison St., between Peoria and Sangamon Streets and in the business of City Dispatch Post with Samuel McIntyre Whittelsey[1017], b. Feb. 27, 1833, in New York City. We can find no record of his being in Chicago at that time, but, since this is the only Samuel M. Whittelsey of that period and since his sister removed to California, it is reasonable to believe that these two young men had this adventure in Chicago. They both died without surviving issue.

THE WHITTLESEY PIANO

George Fenwick, Esq., was a lawyer of Gray's Inn, London; he came back to New England in July, 1639, this time bringing with him his wife, the Lady Alice Boteler, now better known as Lady Fenwick. They came in one of two ships, which arrived at Quinnipiac Harbor, direct from England, after a trip of 7 weeks. Fenwick and his family took up their residence in the "Great Hall" which had been occupied by Lieut. Gardiner. Lady Boteler's daughter, Elizabeth, who was born in Saybrook in 1640, was taken to Rev. Mr. Thomas Hoaker Church to be baptized. Governor Fenwick is spoken of as "a good

LADY FENWICK HARPSICHORD

encourager to that Church." Lady Alice died in 1648, after 9 years of life at the fort, and Fenwick immediately returned to England to assume his place in parliament to which he had been elected. He died Mar. 15, 1657, leaving a will that gave to his sister Elizabeth, wife of John Cullick of Hartford, "all lands, chattels real and personal, that are in New England," but it was not until Oct. 4, 1660, that the General Court of Connecticut granted administration on Fenwick's estate in New England. Elizabeth Cullick must have returned to England to get title under the English law of probate, and it may be assumed that among the many unusual pieces of furniture that she brought with her was a harpsichord (see illustration), undoubtedly made in Antwerp before 1660. She came over on the same ship with Richard Ely, to whom she was married shortly after her arrival. At the time of this marriage she turned over to him all her Lyme lands, of which a large section is still in the hands of the Ely family, descendants from his first wife; and it is through the Ely family that the first known harpsichord came into the Whittlesey family.

The compiler of this genealogy has been informed through the direct descendants that "Mrs. Robert Ely, sister of George Fenwick, and sister-in-law of Lady Fenwick, made a wedding present of the harpsichord to Ruth Dudley who married the first John Whittelsey in Saybrook June 20, 1664." It is perfectly reasonable to believe that this harpsichord was handed down in the Whittlesey family, through John[15], the grandson of John and Ruth (Dudley) Whittelsey, and his wife Sarah Williams, as they established their home on the farm in Saybrook. Their daughter, Sarah Whittelsey[50], married Joseph Whittlesey[26] of Saybrook, the grandparents of Rev. John Whittlesey[201] and his wife Sally Whittelsey[188]. The parents of the latter were Ambrose Whittelsey[76], who worked on the ferry, and his wife, Elizabeth Tulley of Saybrook. All these families lived in close relationship.

The Rev. John Whittlesey[201] removed from Saybrook with his charming bride Sally to the quaint little town of Salem, Conn., in a thriving farming community in which blacksmith shops, gristmills, and sawmills were kept busy. They had among their few valuable possessions this harpsichord which had descended to them from the Fenwicks and Elys. Born in this strictly Methodist household of the Rev. John Whittlesey, father of that form of the sect known as the "New Lights," were their sons Oramel, John, and Henry, who were under rigid discipline from their earliest days.

Their father gained most of his daily bread, not from his religious activities, but from an ivory factory in the town of Salem, and here the three boys worked hard and long. They had developed their enthusiasm for music by playing or drumming on the harpsichord, which had distracted their father to such a degree that he made the boys take the harpsichord out into the barn, where he could not hear their discordant notes. Undaunted, they continued until they convinced their father that they should be allowed to take lessons in melody and harmony. So, from their meager earnings they bought a piano and the Rev. John consented to their practicing and studying nights. Their lessons were taken in New London, a city 13 miles away. Nothing daunted, the lads hitched up the one-horse chaise at 9 o'clock in the evening, arrived in New London about 11.30 P.M. Their lesson was finished at 1.20 A.M., and they started for Salem, arriving at about 4 A.M., and after an hour's sleep commenced work at 5.30 A.M. They took but one lesson a week but kept this up for several years. Their practice commenced at 8 P.M. Since the piano was in an out building away from the house and disturbed no one, Oramel had from 8 to 10 one evening for practice; he took from 10 to 12 the second evening, and from 12 to 2 A.M. the third. In this way each had a full night's rest. They gave several hours' study each week to theory. The piano was a very small old-fashioned instrument of four or five octaves, with small stick legs, and a brass rod for a pedal, at the left-hand side of the rack, the pedal being used with the hand. The piano was purchased with their savings and was used in common, there being no other piano for miles around. Arriving at that longed-for period known as "of age," Oramel and his older brother John decided to go to New York City to seek their fortune. Their younger brother Henry, who was still a minor and had to stay home, wanted the one piano which the three had purchased. The other two also needed it for their work in the city, and the problem of distribution might have changed the whole course of their lives had they not have agreed to take the piano apart and make a new one like it. They put the model together again and the problem was solved. The new piano was far superior to the old one in every way.

THE WHITTLESEY PIANO

Purchased in 1830 by Ezra Adams, Jr., of Canton, Conn., for his daughter, Mary Adams Humphrey. It is now in the possession of her great-granddaughter, Mrs. Susan Adams Andrews of Rocky Hill, Conn. (Sketch by Charles Barney Whittelsey, No. 1945.)

This was the first of the famous Whittlesey pianos, which were later sold in all parts of America.

Oramel and John took the first Whittlesey piano to New York with them. One day when the boys were all at home, they thought of improvements that could be made on their first instrument, and, as their fashion was, the decision was no sooner made than acted upon. They immediately employed all of their evenings in successful and unsuccessful attempts, until they were at last rewarded with quite a superior instrument. Then for the first time the thought struck them that they could "manufacture for ourselves." They built a shop in Salem, commenced work, and, to their surprise, the pianos sold. These Whittlesey pianos were usually built of mahogany or rosewood. Their workmanship was exquisite; they were made entirely by hand, including the sawing of the ivories and the inlaying of mother-of-pearl letters and ornamentations. Each piano bore on the inside a brass plate with the name of Whittlesey. Aside from its beautiful tonal quality, a Whittlesey Piano was a prized bit of furniture in the elegant nineteenth century American home.

Of the trio, Henry and John were the most mechanically inclined and afterward carried on the manufacture of the pianos, while Oramel found himself more inclined to the study of music. He gradually left the factory and devoted the rest of his life to the study and teaching of music and the establishment of the first conservatory of music in New England, "Music Vale Seminary."

In a few years among their piano factory apprentices appeared a Henry J. Newton, of New York City, who, after learning his trade, returned to New York and set up an establishment for himself, paying the Whittleseys a big bonus for their name. He took in a partner by the name of Light, the firm became Light and Newton. Newton made a fortune and retired. Light took in Mr Bradbury. Mr. Light also acquired wealth and left the firm, and the piano became the Bradbury in 1897.

The Whittlesey Brothers continued to manufacture until John moved west to Delaware, Ohio, and Henry moved to Niantic, Conn.

The Whittlesey piano was used at Music Vale Seminary, and there were several standing there Tuesday, Mar. 16, 1897, when Music Vale was burned to the ground.

Henry Whittlesey invented the machine for winding brass strings and one for cutting and placing several wires at once on their keys.

The Fenwick-Whittlesey harpsichord was purchased by a member of the Griswold family of Old Lyme, Conn., and is now in the possession of William E. S. Griswold of Blackhall, Old Lyme, Conn.

FIRST WHITTLESEY MEETING, 1855

From the Hartford Courant, relative to the first Whittlesey meeting in 1855:

The Whittlesey Association, consisting of the descendants of John Whittelsey of Saybrook, assembled on the 20th inst., to the number of about one hundred, at the house of Capt. Azariah Whittelsey, who resides at the ferry where said John built his house 200 years since. Persons were present from 11 towns in Connecticut, from New York, Brooklyn, and Brunswick, from Washington, D. C., Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa. The attention of the guests was first invited to the sumptuous dinner provided by the friends at Saybrook, after which, at 3 o'clock P. M., we were requested to repair to the elegant steam ferryboat of which Capt. Whittelsey is commander. Here the secretary called the meeting to order, and Charles Whittelsey, Esq., of New York, was appointed chairman. The meeting was opened with the reading of the Scriptures and prayer by Rev. Wm. Whittlesey of New Britain. After attending to the report of a committee previously appointed, to erect a fence around the tomb of our ancestor, it was announced that we had arrived at the Point, two miles south of the ferry. A walk of a few minutes brought us to the grave of our ancestor in the old cemetery, where a handsome monument was erected by the family in 1848 [see illustration]. Immediately after returning to the boat, the audience, being increased by numerous inhabitants of Saybrook, was addressed by the Hon. Elisha Whittlesey[310], first comptroller of the United States treasury. It was then unanimously

Resolved, That our grateful acknowledgments are due, and are hereby presented to our friend and relative, the Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, for the elaborate and instructive address to which we have just listened; and that, if agreeable to himself, we respectfully solicit a copy for publication.

While the boat was returning with us to the ferry, reports were presented by the treasurer and by a committee appointed at a previous meeting to superintend the publication of a Family Record. It was then

Resolved, That our thanks be presented to our secretary, Rev. John S. Whittlesey[716], for his long-continued and indefatigable labors in behalf of this association, especially in preparing a memorial chart of the family.

On arriving again at the house of Capt. Whittelsey, it was announced that tea was in waiting, and the well-loaded tables were once and again crowded with grateful guests. A little season was then spent in providing for the financial wants of the association, after which it was

Resolved, That the publishing committee be directed to place the memorial and chart in several cities and other places for sale, and that they give suitable notice of the same to all persons interested. Also,

Resolved, That our thanks be presented to Capt. Azariah Whittelsey and family and to the other friends at Saybrook for their very kind and generous hospitalities and this delightful visit.

Communications were read from various members of the family who were not able to be present; after which, the friends, being nearly all Christians, united in singing the hymn—"Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." Prayer was then offered by Rev. Joseph Whittlesey of Berlin, and the benediction was given by Rev. John Whittlesey of Salem. The friends then separated, many of them, probably, to meet never again in this life. It was felt that the objects specified in the circular, calling the meeting, were fully realized, viz.: To exchange friendly and christian greetings with many relatives with whom otherwise they would never become acquainted in this world; and to enjoy one of the most pleasant and profitable gatherings on earth.

New Britain, Sept. 28, 1855.

Address of Elisha Whittlesey
Delivered at a Meeting of the Whittlesey Family, Which Convened at Saybrook, Connecticut, September 20, 1855
Published, Washington, 1855.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the meeting of the Whittlesey family, held at Saybrook, Conn., 1855.

Resolved, That our grateful acknowledgments are due, and are hereby presented to our friend and relative, the Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, for the elaborate and instructive address to which we have just listened; and that, if agreeable to himself, we respectfully solicit a copy for publication.

Mr. Chairman, Relatives, and Friends: The practice has prevailed, within a few years past, for the descendants of the same ancestry to assemble and renew, or to form acquaintance, and to draw closer the cords of affection and love. The custom has long existed in New England for the children to return to the family hearth at the annual Thanksgiving for the blessings and bounties of a past year; to greet an aged father and mother, if both survive, bringing with them their offspring to bow to the family altar, in ascribing praise to their Heavenly Father for His multiplied and numerous kindnesses and mercies. If, during the year, the hand of death had touched and severed the tender cord uniting relatives, and removed a loved one to the spirit world, the Author of Life was implored to sanctify the dispensation of His providence to the spiritual good of the survivors. Such associations added strength to the family ties, and brought hearts in nearer communion with God. They tended to form the general character of New Englanders, so much admired for order, stability, intelligence, industry, and economy. They were based upon love, the foundation of all that is good upon earth, and on which alone we must rely for salvation. If love, warm, ardent love, existed in families, there would be no jars, no dissensions; if in communities, no strife, no contentions; if in nations, no garments rolled in blood. It is the silken cord of marriage; the shield of infant helplessness; the protector of childhood and youth; the succor of manhood; the downy pillow of declining age; and that on which the head rests, if death is peaceful. Withdrawn from its influence, Cain slew his brother. Biblical history records many scenes of tender family love and affection. Who, in Christian community, has not sympathized with Jacob, when Reuben was interceding with him to permit Benjamin to go with the brethren into Egypt: "Me," he said, "have ye bereaved of my children. Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away; all these things are against me." "And he said, my son shall not go down with you; for his brother is dead, and he is left alone; if mischief befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave." The famine presses; the sons, after earnest solicitations, refuse to go after corn without the lad, although death should be the result. The venerable father yields; and he says: "Take your brother, and arise, go again unto the man;" but he commends them to the mercy of the Almighty; and, with humble submission says: "If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved." It is a trait in the New England character to associate with, and to cultivate affection for, distant as well as near relatives. The history of families is traced, and the degree of relationship ascertained and perpetuated by permanent records. The first meeting of the Whittlesey family in 1845, assembled to take incipient steps to ascertain the extent of our relatives in this country, and the subsequent meetings were held to execute that object, and to make record thereof. The tradition was, that we all descended from John Whittlesey, who landed at Saybrook; but when he landed was not generally known, nor the number of children that composed the family. By the designation of the Whittlesey family, all are embraced who trace their ancestry to John Whittlesey; and we have no reason to believe that any other of the name emigrated to this country. All who possess any share of his blood, by whatever name they are known, we of the name greet them as relatives, and love them as such. No suitable monument marking his grave, measures were adopted to erect one, and we find it finished. Our ancestor, whose grave we have visited, and to whose memory we have assembled to pay our respects, and to greet each other as relatives descended from the same common stock, lived in an interesting period of the history of the world. Powerful governments had existed, flourished, and decayed; wealth not surpassed by modern times had corrupted individuals, masses, and nations; commerce had been extensively carried on by land and sea; and at the end of almost five thousand five hundred years, the fairest continent formed by that Almighty Power that said "Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear, and it was so," was unknown to civilized man. The great lights of science and learning had not conceived the idea of another continent; and it was left to Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, the son of a poor wool-comber, to present it to the favorable consideration of his own government; and not receiving any encouragement to test his new theory, he applied to Portugal with no better success, and afterwards to Spain. "Eighteen years had elapsed since he first conceived the idea of his enterprise; most of that time had been passed in almost hopeless situation, amidst poverty, neglect, and ridicule." There is more in that than one thought—"that the other side of the globe contained land"—than ever emanated from the mind of any other human being. The world has been blessed with renowned philosophers, astronomers, chemists, geologists, navigators, inventors, statesmen, authors, divines, and jurists; but in vastness of conception, Columbus exceeds them all. No human thought ever has, or will, so influence and shape the destiny of man as the one mentioned. It is unnecessary to ask what would now be the condition of Europe, Asia, and Africa, if this continent had not been discovered by Columbus, for no mind is capacious enough to answer the question. It might have been found by chance, but its existence was apparent to his mind by deep thought and reasoning. No one of the many millions who have been born here would have had an existence. Our European ancestors would have left descendants, but not us. The condition they now occupy we do not know; but this we may reasonably believe, it would not equal ours in freedom of civil and religious liberty, in the abundance for supporting life, or in the advantages and privileges of revelation. Luther would have lived; the Reformation would have commenced and progressed, precisely as history records; but where would be seen its effects and fruits at this day? In my opinion, more depends on the people of the United States of America, in the purpose and under the guidance of an overruling Providence, to civilize and christianize the uncivilized and unchristianized parts of the human family, than all the other parts of the world. We have no foreign conquests or colonies with which interest prompts us to drive a profitable commerce as paramount to all other considerations; but our missionaries go into heathen lands to carry the Word of God, and to preach Christ crucified; to convince immortal beings of their lost and ruined condition by nature; and to proclaim "There is balm in Gilead," and a physician that can heal them. Their labors have been greatly blest, and thousands by their instrumentality have "cast their idols to the moles and to the bats." Our ancestor having emigrated to this country as early as 1650, being within thirty years of the first settlement in New England, we, his descendants, are numerous, and it is our privilege to co-operate in this great work of spreading the gospel. Eternity alone can disclose the magnitude and extent of the result of the thought, "that the other side of the globe contained land." Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Spain, furnished Columbus with three small vessels, and one hundred and twenty men to test his theory, and with these he departed from Palos on the 3d of August, 1492. He discovered San Salvador on the 11th, and Cuba on the 28th of October, and Hispaniola on the 6th of December following, and returned to Palos, where he arrived on the 15th of March, 1493. His theory was thus demonstrated to be correct, although the main continent was not then seen. Soon after this commenced the Reformation in Germany. Martin Luther had examined into the nature and use of the seven sacraments, as held by the Romanists, "and denied the name of sacrament to confirmation, holy orders, marriage, or extreme unction." His views were written and published in 1521. His books having been burned by the universities of Cologne and Laurain, and at Rome, Luther determined to retaliate, and at Wittenberg, on the 10th of December, 1521, he burned publicly several popular Papal works, including the bull of Leo X against himself. The Emperor Charles of Germany summoned Luther to appear before a diet, to be held at Worms, on the 17th of April, 1522. Two questions were propounded to him—1st, Whether he avowed himself the author of the books bearing his name? 2d, Whether he was disposed to retract, or persist in their contents? His answer to the first question was in the affirmative. The diet, having closed the business for that day, adjourned. On assembling the next day, the second question was repeated, and his answer was given in a speech of two hours, which ended by these words: "Let me then be refuted and convinced by the testimony of the Scriptures, or by the clearest arguments, otherwise I cannot and will not recant; for it is neither safe nor expedient to act against conscience. Here I take my stand; I can do no otherwise, so help me God. Amen." That speech and that conclusion commenced Reformation. Luther was excommunicated the next day, and confined in the castle of Wittenberg; and then he wrote several works, and corresponded with several persons whose views were in accordance with his own, or who were awakened to the corruption of the Church and the necessity of a reform. The Reformation extended into Switzerland, France, Bohemia, Holland, England, Ireland, Scotland, Poland, Lithuania, and Hungary. The Papal power deluged a portion of these countries with blood. The council of Trent was held for more than seventeen years, and schemes were formed to overthrow the Protestant Church. England having been relieved from persecution under the Papal power, and James I having issued a proclamation that all Protestants conform to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, the dissenters were persecuted. Some were burned, others banished, and others excommunicated. More than five hundred dissenting clergymen were silenced or degraded. Many of the dissenters fled to Holland, from whence a part of them sought liberty of conscience in America. Persecution has not been confined to any age or religious sect. Anyone would naturally and most reasonably conclude, that conscientious, religious men, who had been compelled by cruel, unrelenting persecutions, to leave their country, their family connections, the associations of childhood, youth, and more mature age, the comforts of home, ample means of support, schools, churches, the graves of their fathers, children, and, perhaps, of a beloved companion, to seek shelter in a distant wilderness, inhabited by savages, exposed in their voyage to shipwreck, in ships unskillfully navigated, poorly supplied, without houses to cover them on landing, and without provisions prepared in advance to sustain life, would, from principle and duty, have hearts so filled with love to God and man, as to respect the personal rights of others to their fullest extent. History, however, furnishes many lamentable instances to the contrary. Some of those who fled from persecution, leaving behind them every tie and comfort referred to, were no sooner in power, than they in turn became persecutors of nonconformists, and imprisoned, fined, whipped, and banished them. Whether our ancestor fled from persecution, although young, or came to this country with others who were obliged from that cause to establish their homes on the newly-discovered continent, or whether he came as an adventurer, is not known; but if the Reformation and the persecution that succeeded had not taken place, it is not probable he would have left his place of birth. Zeal and perseverance in a good, just cause are commendable, but fanaticism, on any question or in any cause, should be guarded against and avoided. Controlled by the arch enemy, it assails morality, religion, order, law, the harmony of churches, families, neighborhoods, states, and the Union itself. The Mayflower that left Plymouth, England, on the 6th of September, 1620, with the first band of Puritans, arrived on what is now the coast of Massachusetts on the 9th of November, and on the 11th of December a part of the congregation of the Rev. Mr. Robinson, who had fled from persecution, landed at what is now known as Plymouth, Massachusetts. No one hundred men, by their voluntary choice, were ever surrounded by so many perils. Cold, famine, disease, savages, not one of them, but all combined. The number of Indians that inhabited the territory, now the United States, is not known; but it must have been very great. The Narragansett, Mohegan, and Pequot tribes were powerful in the immediate vicinity of the first settlements in New England. The Indians, as a class of people, were bold, courageous, and resolute. In oratory, not surpassed. It was said in England, after Mr. Jefferson published his speech of Logan, in his notes on Virginia, that it was written by Mr. Jefferson and not spoken by Logan. The speech is Indian throughout, and Mr. Jefferson never saw the day he could compose it. He substituted parts of one or two sentences, which greatly weakened the force of the language. The speech was correctly published at the time in Williamsburg, Virginia, and in Albany, New York. No American statesman has equalled the eloquence of Corn Planter, a Seneca chief, in two speeches he made to General Washington, at Philadelphia, one in 1790, and the other in 1791. It was, most evidently, the design of Providence, that the European and American aborigines should not amalgamate. A few exceptions exist, but, as a general principle, there was no desire to form a union by marriage; and this was wisely ordered by Him who formed them, and has vast objects to accomplish in the settlement of this country by Europeans. If amalgamation had taken place—the Indians being owners of the soil and most numerous—the European character would have been lost. The Bible would have been brought here in vain; schools and churches would not have been established; no free government would have been formed. When the Jews were going up to possess the land of Canaan, God said "I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs against thee." "I will not drive them out from before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee." "By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land." This has been literally fulfilled in the settlement of the United States, as if the same promise had been specially made by the Great Jehovah to the first emigrants. The Jews were told, in regard to the inhabitants of Canaan, "Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods." "They shall not dwell in thy land lest they make thee sin against me; for if thou serve their gods, it will surely be a snare unto thee." This command has been more strictly observed by those who settled the North American colonies, han it was by the Jews after they entered Canaan. It was engraven upon the hearts of our fathers, and remains to this day upon our hearts. Saybrook, where our ancestor, John Whittlesey, resided, and where his remains now repose, is among the earliest towns settled in the limits of the territory, now the State of Connecticut, and in several particulars it occupies a prominent page in history. A grant of land was made by the Earl of Warwick unto the Right Honorable William, Viscount Say and Seal, and unto the Right Honorable Lord Brook and others, on the 19th of March, 1631. This was thirty-one years before the charter of Charles, which was in 1662. The boundary of the grant from the Earl of Warwick was from the Narragansett river, forty leagues on the seashore, of three miles to a league, making one hundred and twenty miles, as the coast lay towards Virginia, from the Western Ocean to the South Sea. George Fenwick was one of the patentees, and in the summer of 1639, he named the tract about the mouth of the river, Saybrook, in honor of Lords Say and Seal, and Brook. In the year 1635, the proprietors appointed John Winthrop, the younger, an agent, and authorized him to erect a fort on the river Connecticut, as he came to the bay; and to build houses for fifty men, at least, to be employed, and afterwards such houses as might receive men of quality. The last-mentioned houses were to receive the distinguished proprietors, or a part of them, and it is said that Oliver Cromwell contemplated to make this point his residence. The fort was erected and garrisoned. The Indians were constantly on the watch—captured, tortured, and killed, not only the inhabitants, but the soldiers when out of the fort and not secure at all points. Vessels were captured in the river, within sight of the fort, and the crews were put to death, or to the most excruciating pains that savage barbarity could invent.

In 1636, the fort was besieged—the houses without were destroyed, stacks were burned, cattle killed. A portion of the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth in 1620 from the Mayflower, with other emigrants, settled at Newton (soon afterwards called Cambridge), at Dorchester, and Watertown; in 1635, or fifteen years from the time of landing, "became so cramped and straightened for room," that they made settlements at Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield—traversing a wilderness of a hundred miles in extent, encountering such hardships and privations as only men, women, and children of their resolution, strengthened by faith in the guidance of an overruling Providence, could bear. The settlement at Saybrook was contemporaneous with the first settlements within what are now the boundaries of this state. The most sanguinary battle in the early history of the Colony, considering the number engaged, was fought on the 26th of May, 1637, between sixty men from Connecticut and twenty from Massachusetts, under the command of John Mason, and the Pequots, a powerful tribe of Indians—bold, courageous, vindictive, skillful in the use of the bow and arrow, and hostile to the whites. The Indians lost about six hundred men, women, and children. The loss of the whites was two only. Mason left the scene of slaughter with twenty men, and marched across the country from near where New London now is to the fort built by John Winthrop at this place. The roar of cannon bore testimony to the importance of the victory in the estimation of the garrison and the inhabitants. It being ascertained that "the men of quality," so spoken of in the power of attorney given to John Winthrop, would not emigrate to this country, George Fenwick, on behalf of the proprietors, on the 5th of December, 1644, sold the fort and a portion of the land, and ceded the jurisdiction to Connecticut, so far as it was, or should be, in his power to make the conveyance. The next year the General Court of Connecticut confirmed the grant, and levied an impost duty of two pence on each bushel of grain, and six pence on each hundred pounds of biscuit, and a small duty on all beaver that might be exported from the mouth of the river for ten years, from the 1st of March, 1646. At this time the productions of the country on and near the Connecticut river in Massachusetts, as far up as Springfield, were sent to market down that river, and the duties levied on exports, to pay the consideration of the cession by George Fenwick, were deemed by Massachusetts to be burdensome, and they were subjects of complaint and negotiation. The fort commanding the mouth of the river greatly added to the importance of this position in the early settlement of the country, as it not only tended to give protection to the inhabitants, but made the commerce of Massachusetts exported out of the river pay tribute.

The refusal of the inhabitants of this town in 1675 to surrender the fort to Major Andross, an emissary of the Duke of York, is proof of their courage, fidelity, and sterling integrity. When the surrender was demanded by a superior armed force conveyed by water the surrender was prompt and decisive. Common schools were co-existent with every settlement in New England. The prominent emigrants were men of learning, and all were intelligent, moral, and practical. All duly estimated the importance of educating their children, and qualifying them to transact the common business of life; but many were fitted for the bar, the pulpit, and halls of legislation. The incorporations of townships, with the power to elect officers, to levy taxes, to investigate complaints for the violation of criminal laws, were admirable primary schools for the display of sound judgment, talent, intelligence, and ingenuity. If a young man discharged a minor office with fidelity and requisite ability he was promoted; and the house of representatives, or the council, was open to his ambition. Common schools were requisite to instruct the masses, and to disseminate general intelligence, but colleges were necessary for knowledge of classical literature. The emigrants for a long period of time were restricted by their means for raising money; and establishing the Harvard University at Cambridge, Mass., in 1638, eighteen years after the Pilgrims landed, shows the anxiety of the noble spirits of that day to raise high the standard of education. Those who were able in Connecticut to educate their sons in college sent them to Cambridge; but finding it inconvenient, and an expenditure of money without the Colony that might better be retained in it, an effort was made in 1698 by several clergymen and other distinguished men to raise funds for establishing a college within the Colony. New England—the descendants of New Englanders, wherever located—the states and territories of the United States, the isles of the sea, the missionary stations in Europe, Asia, and Africa, are under obligation to the New England clergymen. They were foremost in promoting common school and collegiate education, and in the maintenance of virtue and sound morals. In conflicts with the Indians, they nerved the arms of the whites for battles; moderated their exultation, if victorious, and raised them from despondency, if vanquished, by repeating the common law of Moses, "Thou shalt not be affrighted at them; for the Lord thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible." The non-conformists were the advocates of freedom at the commencement and during the American Revolution. They were not politicians, in the ordinary acceptation of the term; but they were supporters of order and right, and they co-operated with the people in the great object of establishing a free, independent, and republican government. They possessed, in my earliest recollection, great influence, without mingling with any party organization. It was the influence of intelligence, of morals, of religion, of devotedness to their high and sacred calling. The first meeting to found a college in Connecticut convened at New Haven in 1700. A library being essential for consummating their object, about forty quarto volumes were then and there contributed—a small beginning; but the work thus commenced, and the movers in the scheme were encouraged. The library of Yale College now contains 50,481 volumes. At another meeting in 1701 the college was located at Saybrook, temporarily, and the first commencement was held here on the 13th of September, 1702. Fourteen commencements following were held here, and degrees were conferred; but by combining interests and by increased donations, a majority of the trustees decided to locate the college at New Haven, and gave it the name of Yale in "honor of Elihu Yale," who contributed to it liberally in books and money. This is the third college established in the United States. Harvard preceded it by sixty-two years, and William and Mary at Williamsburg, Virginia, by nine years. The celebrated Saybrook platform was drawn up and agreed upon in this place on the 9th of September, 1708, by a convention of ministers and delegates from churches in the four counties of Hartford, Fairfield, New London, and New Haven, the only counties then organized in the Colony.

The convention was held in pursuance of an act of the legislature at the previous May session. It agreed to recommend the confession of faith adopted by a synod at Boston on the 12th of May, 1680; and, for the better regulation of the administration of church discipline fifteen articles were adopted. A difference of opinion had existed as to discipline and ecclesiastical rules and government in the churches. The convention was held to reconcile that difference and to restore harmony. A platform was agreed upon, and it has outlived all platforms adopted since; and has done more to advance the peace and happiness of the people in New England, and in other sections, than all the platforms that have been adopted from 1708 to the present time. It was confirmed by the legislature at its October session of the same year; but the act of confirmation expressly stated it was not to prevent "any other society or church from establishing, exercising worship, and discipline, in their own way, according to their consciences." If conventions at this day, whether political or ecclesiastical, met to harmonize, to cement, and to build up—and not to disturb, to separate, and to destroy—they would better promote the temporal and spiritual interests of the people than they do now. The Saybrook platform will be spoken of as long as time shall endure. Some will mention it with respect, and some with derision. I have a copy of it with me that was printed in the year 1710, by Thomas Short, at New London. My friend, Peter Force, an antiquarian, was so kind as to permit me to take it from his library to exhibit to this meeting, most appropriately assembled at this post, where our ancestor resided. Mr. Force is editing The American Archives, and is doing more to collect historical facts of this country, from its discovery to the formation of the constitution, than is being done by any other individual, or by combinations of individuals or societies. We are informed by the committee of publication, who have so long and faithfully labored for us, that "John Whittlesey is believed to be the only person of the name who ever emigrated to the United States. He came to this country about 1650, and became a tanner and shoemaker." Roger Sherman was a shoemaker, and one of the most useful and respectable men of this country. He made shoes in early manhood, and laws and constitutions in mature age. Mr. Mason said of him: "Roger Sherman had more common sense than any man I ever knew." Mr. Jefferson characterized him as "a man who never said a foolish thing in his life." As one of his descendants, I rejoice that our ancestor was not ashamed to work. His occupation was respectable, useful, and profitable. Such was his character that he won the affections of Miss Ruth Dudley, a daughter of Wm. Dudley of Guilford, Conn. The characters of young men in those days "were weighed in the balance," and young ladies knew in what light to view them. Our relatives have generally enjoyed that medium condition that Agur so earnestly supplicated the Ruler of all Events might be his when he said, "Give me neither poverty nor riches." This produces the greatest degree of earthly bliss and happiness, although we are prone to envy the rich for their supposed superior enjoyments. Our family has rather sought to be useful; industrious, honest, economical, moral, and religious, than to hoard up riches. We are blessed with an ancestry whose history we may study without a blush of shame or remorse. They were Puritanic, and if they did not formally enter into the following covenant, recommended by the North Association of Hartford county in the year 1711, they practiced it: "That they would look well to their households, keep their children and servants in due subjection, instruct them in the principles of religion, and endeavor to restrain them from all profaneness and immorality; that, as much as in them lay, they would live peaceably with all men, carefully avoiding the unjustly giving or taking offense; that they would be careful to maintain a chaste conversation, watching against all incentives to uncleanness, especially against keeping vain and disorderly company; that they would mind their own business, and strictly observe the rules of righteousness in commerce and dealings with one another—heedfully watching against all violations by deceit, oppression, and all unjust, dishonest dealing whatsoever; that they would speak the truth one with another, avoiding all lying, slandering, backbiting, reviling, and promise-breaking." Have not all these principles and rules been impressed on our minds by our parents from the earliest recollections, and held constantly in view by conversations and unwavering, bright examples? The Sabbath-school to instruct, the lecture-room and the sanctuary to gain spiritual knowledge and strength, the chamber of sickness to administer to disease, the hovel of want to relieve by suitable aid, and the house of mourning to give consolation to wounded distressed hearts—are familiar to our relatives. So far as I know or believe, they are strangers to the gambling table, to the haunts of dissipation and revelry, to the company of Sabbath-breakers, to the associations of infidels, and to the houses of infamy. Boasting is excluded, but we may say with the Psalmist, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Every parent has reason to be thankful that his son, if arrived to years of manhood, has not committed an offense the punishment of which is the penitentiary; or that his daughter has not forfeited the confidence of her mother, and brought anguish to a bosom on which she once leaned and fondled with so much delight. Numerous as the name is, scattered over this broad land through its length and breadth, I do not know of a criminal record that perpetuates the guilt of one of the family. There was a transaction during the war of 1812 we wish was blotted out from our memories. An intelligent, pious, zealous, energetic maiden relative, from the state of New York, who was with us at our meeting in 1845, from a sense of duty to the cause of education and religion, left her country and the endearments of home to reside at Beirut in Syria. She arrived at the place of her labors and anticipated usefulness; but she soon sank under disease, ceased from earthly toils, and entered, as we hope and believe, into a state of peaceful, blessed rest. Another relative, Mrs. Rosanna Foote, more nearly connected than the other lady with my branch of the family and some others here present—a lady of the most amiable and lovely disposition, pious from childhood, of enlarged mental endowments—devoted her life to the missionary cause, and with the Rev. Mr. Foote, her husband, resided several years at Tripoli and on the neighboring mountains in Syria. The disease that eats and consumes, when it wastes the earthly tabernacle, was making rapid progress on her frame; and with the hope she might see her beloved relatives, and the home of her infancy, she commenced and prosecuted the journey under exceedingly trying circumstances; but pain and distress and agony were subdued and silenced by submission and faith and hope. The highlands, first seen at sea on approaching New York, were announced from masthead. The news lighted up the countenance of an expiring, rational, and immortal being, on the boundary between two worlds, when an angel was commissioned to bear away her spirit, to hold communion, as we hope and believe, with the spirits of father and mother, and others she loved on earth; leaving a sweet child, an affectionate husband, sisters, brothers, and relatives, to mourn that they should no more see her on earth. One of our relatives spent several years in the missionary field of the Sandwich Islands, and lately arrived in this state on account of ill-health. Our ancestors believed that all good citizens should be ready and willing to share the dangers of the camp, if the country was engaged in war. Many of them were in the old French war and in the war of the Revolution. One of them was slain at the head of his company at the battle of Wyoming, and one was massacred at Fort Griswold. In the municipal concerns of towns and counties, in dispensing justice on the bench, in legislating for states, perhaps our relatives have discharged their full share of duty, and with commendable acceptance. Every rational, immortal being has important duties to perform in whatever station he occupies. The unsubdued firmness, and the undaunted courage of the rank and file win the battle, although a more enlarged, scientific mind plans and directs. All of us have weighty responsibilities resting upon us in training our children and others cast upon us; in rescuing the unprotected orphan from the paths of vice; administering to his wants, physical, mental, and spiritual; in bearing our share of the expenses of the many benevolent institutions of the day; in exerting a moral influence in the respective communities in which we reside; and especially in looking into our own bosoms to see if all is right there, and if not, to cast out and dislodge whatever is imperfect and wrong. To know one's self is the most difficult lesson to learn, and yet the most necessary and useful. We have a rich, unbounded heritage in the free government, and in the admirable institutions left us by our ancestors. After years of toils, sacrifices, and sufferings, their highest anticipations were fully accomplished. No people compare with us in prosperity and happiness. As patriots and as Christians, we should perpetuate the government under the Constitution to our children, that they and their children may participate in the same blessings we have so bountifully enjoyed. Dear relatives, we are soon to separate, and very few of us will meet again on earth; but, depending on the mercy of God, through the merits of His Son, let it be our unwavering aim to meet in Heaven.

WHITTELSEY TERCENTENARY REUNION, FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1935

One hundred and forty descendants of John and Ruth Dudley Whittelsey met at the Pease House, Old Saybrook, Conn., and had a perfectly wonderful time on a perfectly wonderful day.

After registering and receiving pictures of the Whittelsey monument, the old Whittelsey ferryboat and the monument on the site of the Old Fort, the members of the family filled forty cars and were escorted by the state police to the burying ground. They assembled around the Whittelsey monument and listened to prayer by Rev. H. P. Woodin, of Saybrook, Conn.

After visiting the graves of the original ancestor John Whittelsey and his wife, Ruth Dudley and Ruth Dudley's parents, the grave of Lieut. John, the first Whittelsey born in this country (which is shown in the picture as the headstone to the left of the Whittelsey monument, page 37), and the grave of Lady Fenwick, Mrs. Conklin of Hartford exhibited a lock of Lady Fenwick's hair.

The family reassembled in their cars and were taken to the First Congregational Church which was the place of worship of the early generations, where they listened to a historical sketch by Rev. Mr. Woodin and examined the old Communion set and the old furniture.

They were next taken through the town to the site of the "old Whittelsey ferry" and the original home of John and Ruth Dudley Whittelsey. After looking at this interesting site, they returned through the North Cove Road, which is lined with homes of the Whittelseys and their relatives.

They returned to the Pease House where they enjoyed a shore dinner. After the dinner, Mr. C. B. Whittelsey[1945] of Hartford gave a historical sketch of the families, tracing the name from the year 664 up to and including the first generation in this country. The meeting then was turned into an open forum.

Mr. George Whittelsey[3068] of New London, Mr. George N. Whittelsey[2292] of Brooklyn, C. W. Whittelsey[2378] of New Haven, F. E. Whittelsey[1733] of Correy, Pa., Horace B. Whittelsey[3036] of Idaho and several daughters of Whittelsey and daughters-in-law made remarks relative to their families.

The Travelers Insurance Company's radio station broadcast over WTIC the Music Vale "Quick Step." The orchestra at the Pease House played the "Quick Step" and the "Voice of the Winds." This music was composed by Oramel Whittlesey[495] of Music Vale Seminary, Salem, Conn.

The meeting closed with the singing of "America" and "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds."

The exact program as carried out in the reunion 80 years ago was followed.

THE GENEALOGY OF JOHN AND RUTH (Dudley) WHITTELSEY AND THEIR DESCENDANTS 1635-1941

First Generation in America

1. John Whittelsey, b. July 4, 1623, in Cambridgeshire, Eng., near Whittlesea (the son of John Whittelsey, b. 1593 Cambridgeshire, Eng., and Lydia Terry, whom he m. in London Oct., 1621/2.) (Her mother's name was Wesley.) [St. Anne Church Records, London, 1624.] This John Whittelsey came to America with the Lord Say and Seal Company in 1635. [Hon. Charles C. Whittelsey[870], St. Louis, 1885.] "On the 19th of March, 1631, Robert Lord of Warwick, president of the Council of Plymouth, under his hand and seal, did grant and confirm to the Hon. Wm. Viscount, Say and Seal, Robert Lord Brooks, Robert Lord Rich, Chas Fennes, Esq., Sir Nathaniel Rich, et al., in all eleven, from Narragansett River to Virginia. In 1635, Lord Say and Seal, and Robert Lord Brooks arrived in Boston bringing with them a complement of young men." [Benjamin Trumbull, "History of Connecticut, 1818; Mass. Hist. Coll.; Agreement of Saybrook with John Winthrop and Say and Seal et al., 1635.]

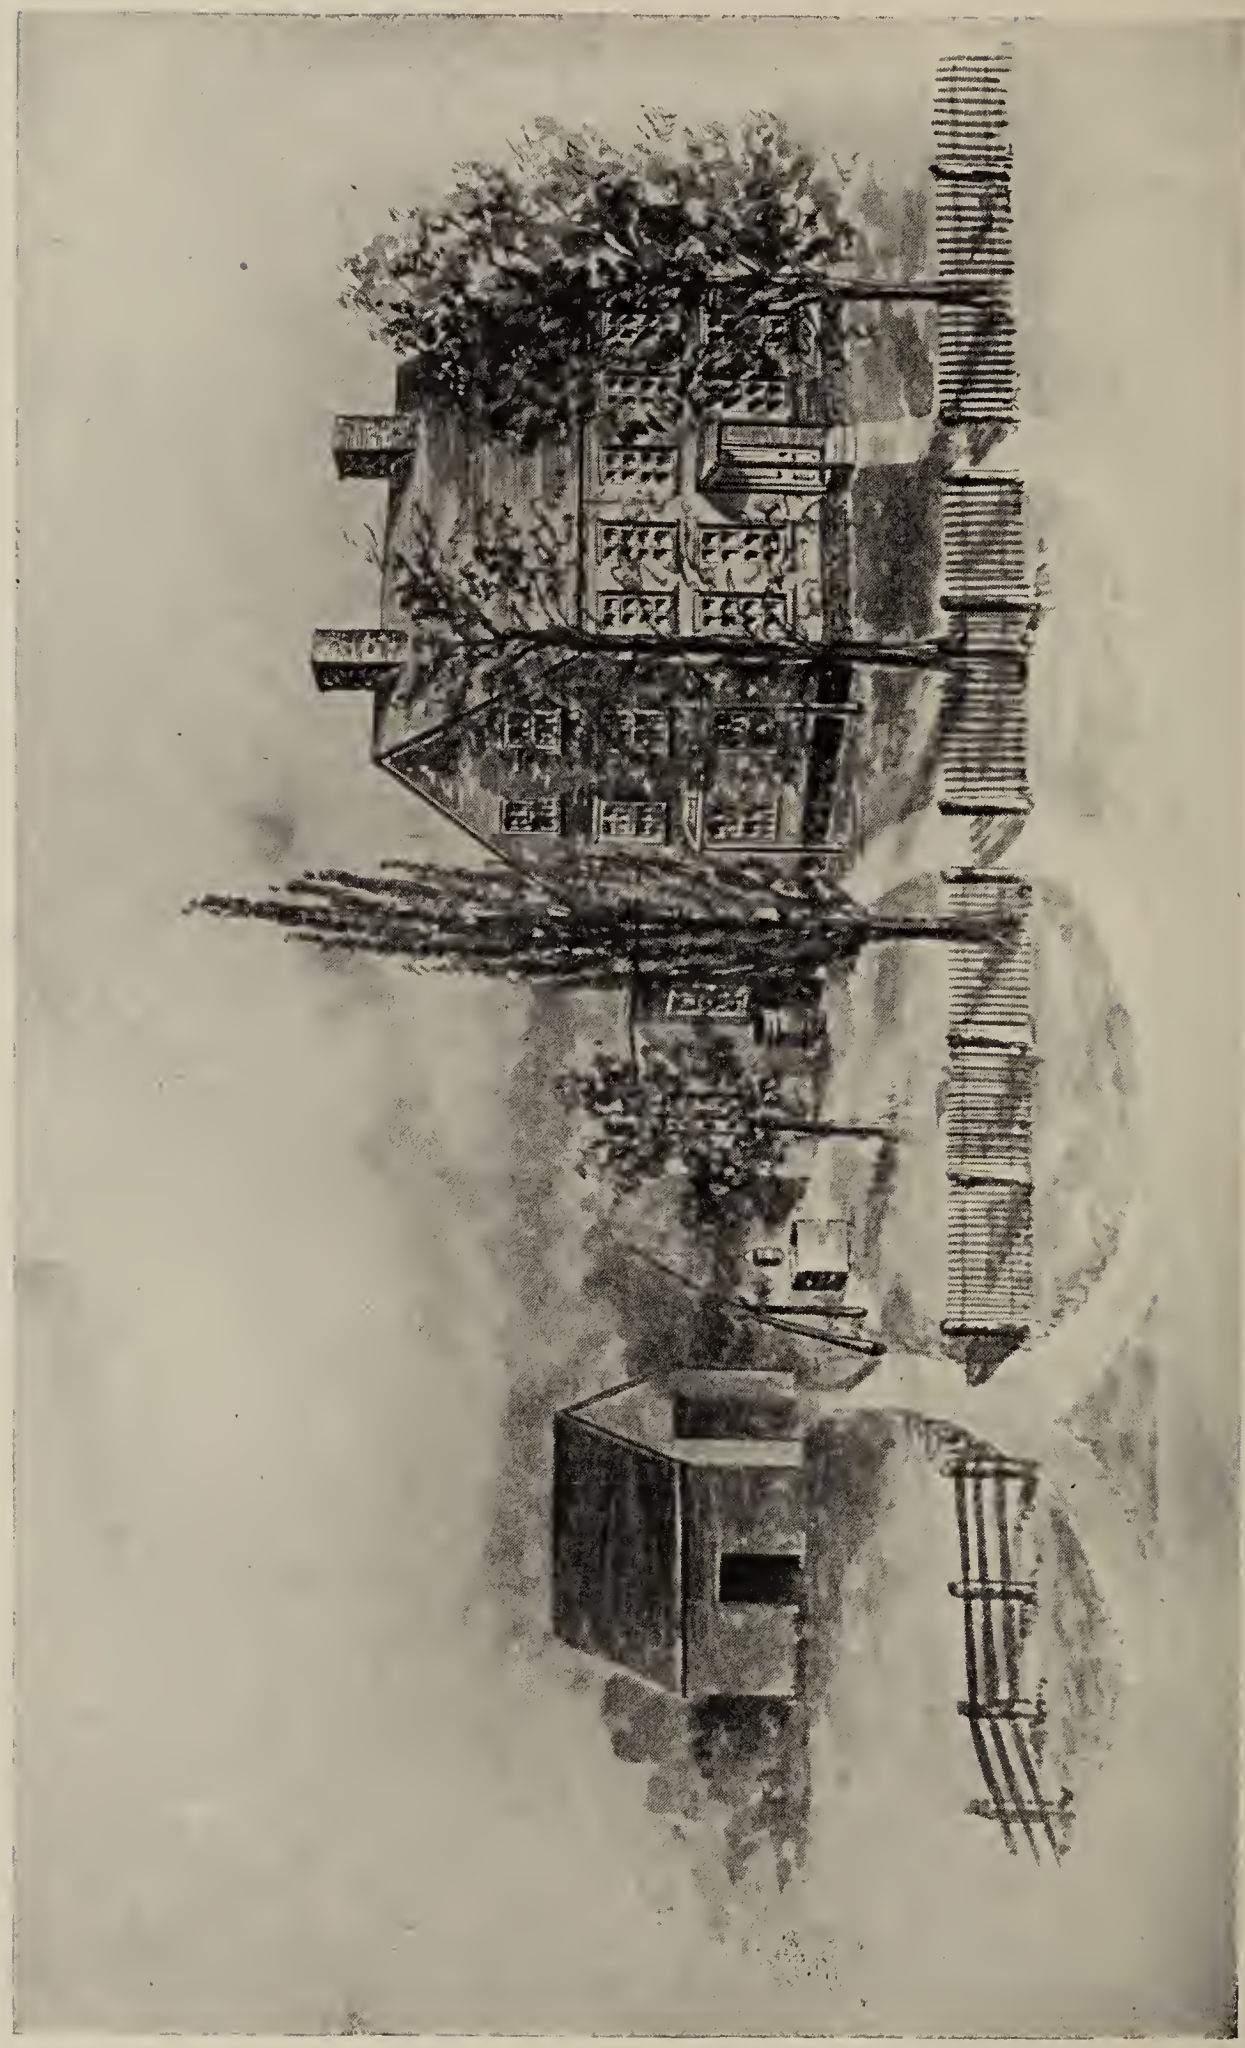
In the early records of Boston and Saybrook we find the name written in many forms of orthography. The earliest in Boston letters, dated 1635, we find it written as John Whitele, other places as Whitly, Whitley, Whitsly, Whitsley, Whitelsey, Witsley, Whichley, Witesley, Whichelsey, and Witese. [Massachusetts Colony Records, 1628–41; Colony Records of Connecticut and Massachusetts.]

In 1636, news reached Boston that the Dutch settlers were coming up the Connecticut, and Lord Say and Seal called together their men and boys and hastened to the mouth of the river just in time to prevent the Dutch entering the river in their boats.



HOME OF JOHN AND RUTH (DUDLEY) WHITTELSEY, No. 1, SAYBROOK, CONN.
(Sketch by Mrs. Ingraham, No. 493)

The records of Saybrook, from this time to 1670, were destroyed in the burning of the New London Halls of Record, where they were kept, but we find that "The Whittelseys" are mentioned as among the inhabitants of Middlesex county in 1648. [Field's statistical account of Middlesex county.]

A letter from John Clark et al. in 1660, to Gov. John Winthrop at Hartford, because pay was refused men for cutting twenty acres of grass for Master Fenick's (Fenwick) farm. "We have sent up to your worship one of the men we employed in the service aforesaid. His name is John Whittlese, who can further inform you in the case propounded." [Mass. Hist. Coll., Vol. 9, "The Trumbull Papers."]

"John Whittelsey, 1662, and William Dudley of Saybrook, contracted with the town to keep a ferry across the Connecticut river at Say Brook, from Tilleys (Tullys) Point, for which the town gave them all the toll received of strangers, except the inhabitants of Say Brook; twenty acres of upland, and ten of meadow, and two hundred pounds in commonage: one hundred pounds on each side of the river. Whittelsey and Dudley contracted to build a road to the point and build a horse canoe or boat large enough to carry over three horses at a time and such passengers as desired to cross the river." This contract was made with John Wastall, John Clark, Wm. Pratt, Wm. Waller, and Robert Lay, agents for the town. (Hinman, "History of First Puritan Settlers," 1846, p. 97.]

John Whittelse m. at Saybrook, June 20, 1664, Ruth Dudley b. April 20, 1645, in Guilford, Conn., dau. of William and Jane (Lutman) Dudley. [See memoranda.] [Records of Saybrook, Conn., Vol. 1; New England Historical and Genealogical Register, Vol. 4, 1850.]

Mr. John Whittelsey bought lands of Wm. Lay in 1677 and 1678, and of Lyman Cunningham in 1679. He was among the representatives in the General Assembly elected for the town of Saybrook between 1644 and 1685; he was also elected representative in 1696, 1697, 1698, 1699, and 1703; appointed Collector of Ministers' Rates, 1678; Townsman, 1697; Collector of Ministers' Rates in 1681 and 1682. [250th Anniversary of the Settlement of Saybrook, pamphlet; History of Middlesex County, Colonial Records of Connecticut.] One of a committee about land claimed by Capt. Chapman, 1683; one of a committee about controversy as to lands; and one of the attorneys, 1684. [Whittlesey Memorials, p. iv.] One of the Listers, 1685, the same year a witness as to town vote of land to James Ley; one of the "seaters" to seat people in the meeting house (i. e., to designate seats for persons and families for the year) 1687; townsman, 1688, 1689; one of a committee "to suruay and setle the sayd road between Saybrook mill and Lieut. Joanes' mill, to above Samuel Buell's house in Kenllworth, or the most convenient place they can find to end," October, 1692. [Colonial Records of Connecticut, October, 1692, p. 85.] One with others to "grant land as they thought convenient to John Clark; and Collector of Ministers' Rates, 1693; was granted five acres of land at Tillys Point Plain, 1694; a committee was appointed to lay out land formerly granted to him in 1695. [Whittlesey Memorials.] Was one of a committee to run line between Saybrook and Haddam, 1688; townsman the same year. [Saybrook Records.] He erected his house near the ferry, on the west bank of the river, the site of which remained in the family until very recent years. About 1681 he bought of John Raymond a larger house which now stands on the road to the ferry. The ferry was conveyed to the town in 1839.

"As to the military character of John the propositus, there is no record. The Pequod or Pequot war occurred before he was first heard of at Saybrook. This settlement, like all those of New England pioneers, had its fort built in 1665. Until after the war with King

Philip, every man was a soldier. They established their families in the midst of hostile Indians, where their defense developed entirely upon themselves. They had no assistance from the parent country, because emigration to these shores was against the wishes of the government. Perpetual bloody and desperate war, was the lot of the early New England man. As early as 1636, Saybrook was the scene of savage attacks. Capt. John Mason passed there on his way to assail the Pequots of Rhode Island. Here, as usual, the fort constituted the central figure of the settlement. In 1664, when John was married, the Indian wars had not ceased. Scouts, expeditions, and skirmishes, were events with which every one was familiar. It required for these operations, which were conducted by squads, seldom amounting in numbers to a company, men who not only had courage but military address. It was not always the commissioned officer who had command. Sergeants and corporals were selected with more regard to previous service, skill, and character. Small parties were kept as outposts far away in the wilderness where it was necessary to exercise individual vigilance, equal to that of their savage enemies. The country was on the footing of minute militia men, equipped and provided for attack. On them rested the security of everything dear to the inhabitants—country, property, and household. We must not think too lightly when we see in the early records the prefix 'sergeant' or lieutenant to the names of their first characters. Very few attained the rank of 'captain.' There is no evidence what part John Whittelsey took in the forays or defences of his time." [Col. Charles Whittlesey, "The Military Record of the Descendants of John Whittelsey and Ruth Dudley," 1878.] He died Apr. 15, 1704, forty years after his marriage. Having spent the active portion of his life within view of the fort, the scene of many conflicts, we are permitted to surmise that he bore his part in them. Whether he was a willing or an unwilling emigrant is unknown. His appointments in the first church of Saybrook shows that he and Ruth were eminent Christians, and from them has sprung a race who have done honor to themselves and their country in every calling which they have followed. Second Generation

2*. John Whittelsey (John[1]), b. Dec. 11, 1665, in the house beside the ferry at Say Brook Point, Conn.—the first Whittelsey born in America. On this time-honored spot he spent his life. He was a shoemaker by trade and kept general merchandise for sale; it is also probable that he loaned money in small amounts at a good rate of interest. He served the colony in both political and military offices. WHen the Rain-bow is clear, then shall it not be long clear after, which betokeneth a Windy Air or Rain.

When a Rain-bow is seen in the morning, it betokeneth Rain the same day, and a great boisterous storm.

When the Rain-bow doth appear about three or four of the Clock in the Afternoon, it betokeneth Fair Weather, and there shall be against it a strong Dew. When there doth a Rain-bow appear about noon, it betokeneth much Water; when the Rain-bow doth appear about the going down of the Sun, then doth it for the most part Thunder and Rain; when it appeareth in the Orient, then followeth fair weather.

When the Rain-bow appeareth in boisterous Weather in the north, it betokeneth fair weather and clear; and contrariwise when it appeareth and is seen with a clear Summer Weather in the West, or at noon, it followeth Rain; Haly saith, when the Rain-bow appeareth in fair and clear weather, it betokeneth increase of raw weather, and in the Winter it betokeneth less.

MEMORANDA

2. Lieutenant John Whittelsey left an Almanac, published in 1690 by John Tully of Cambridge, Mass. (see page 59) in which he (Mr. W.) kept his accounts and some memoranda. In 1897 this book was in the possession of Mr. John C. Whittlesey[1149] of Rockville, Conn. Its state of preservation is excellent, writing clear, and of good penmanship; it is bound in leather, evidently done by Lieut. Whittelsey, and in every instance in which the family name is mentioned it is written "Whittelsey." The entries are made on parts of pages, not entirely taken up by the calendar of the months and advertisements. The following is a copy of some of the notes made by Lieut. Whittelsey in this book, under the dates given. Under the date of 1690, there is entered what is evidently a list of his debtors. Among them are the following names: "Nathan Prat, 57; Joseph Prat, 31; Father Whittelsey, 73; Joseph Ingraham, 24:46:"

On the 1st of December, 1740, he was "moderator" of the parish meeting. In 1744 he was received into the church at Bethlehem by letter from Newington. Mr. Whittelsey's name appears on many important committees appointed by the "General Court," and he was entrusted with large sums of the Colony's moneys, which were used by him in settlement of the claims on the government, and to purchase food and clothing for the colonial troops. He made several trips to New York and Albany to purchase food and clothing for the troops, and the means of travel were very limited and perilous at the time. His name appears as auditor of the Colony accounts, and other appointments significant of his esteem in public service. His occupation was that of a farmer. The Rev. Samuel Whittelsey was one of the most distinguished preachers and faithful ministers of the colony in which he lived. Such was the vigor and penetration of his mind that he easily comprehended subjects which presented great difficulties to others. The dates of the printed sermons preached by the Rev. Samuel Whittelsey, are: The Election sermon, 1731; sermon preached at the ordination of Samuel Whittlesey, Jr., 1737; on the death of John Hall, Esq., 1730; at the first church in Boston, 1731. These are to be found in the Historical Library at Hartford, Conn. [Allen, "Biographical Dictionary"; Dana's century discourses at Wallingford, Coll. Hist. Soc., Vol. 10, p. 159.] A copy of the sermons is in the possession of the Hartford Historical Society and Yale University.

President Stiles, in an obituary of Rev. Samuel Whittelsey published shortly after his death in the Boston Post Boy, speaks of him as follows: "He was a gentleman of penetrating genius, solid judgment, and extensive understanding; indefatigable and unwearied in his application to study and liberal inquiry by which his acquaintance with the sciences became extensive, his knowledge universal, and in moral wisdom he had few equals. Under the influence of Christian principles his soul flowed to diffusive benevolence. He lived the religion he inculcated and recommended it by powerful charms of a virtuous example. His talents as a preacher were singular, being master of an engaging elocution and address, and in composition judicious and instructive. He ministered intellectual food and entertained his audience with the beaten oil of the sanctuary. He labored with delight in the word and doctrine. The services and devotions of the sanctuary were his supreme pleasure. In many ways, by his extensive influence, he served the Church of Christ and the public glory of his kingdom. Happy in offspring and a well-educated family, his sons, under the advantage of a liberal education, survived him in his genius, improvement and Christian character. As a private Christian he was exemplary, virtuous, and pious; had a natural reservedness of mind which rendered him singular in bearing injuries which the best cannot escape; and when reviled he reviled not again, but retaliated in gratitude with meekness and goodness which extorted veneration from the partial, as well as ordained a cheerful tribute from the candid judge of merit. Not less eminent was his patience, especially in the lengthened illness which finished his life. The supports of religion and well-regulated life shone in the steady calmness and composure of his temper during his illness; while a mortification in his legs and feet, arising from an ill stage of blood and disorder of body, preyed upon him, and in a gradual decline extinguished his life. Thus died Samuel the prophet, full of days and the Holy Ghost. After he had long and faithfully served his generation he 'fell on sleep, was gathered to his fathers and all Israel lamented him.' "

Dr. Chauncey of Boston said of him that he was one of the greatest men in Connecticut.

Rev. Samuel was a leader of the "Old Light" party in the struggles against the "Great Awakening." His will and inventory in the New Haven Probate Record, Vol. 8, show an estate of about £22,000, of which a scant hundred pounds is invested in books, and fourteen times that amount in "Negro and Mulatto Servants." [Dexter, "Biographies and Annals of Yale."]

81. Davee Whittelsey was a boatman with considerable spirit and pluck. It is said that during the time the British were lying near to our fort at Saybrook in their ships of war, some of the merchants of that ancient township allowed their desire for higher price for their goods to lead them into very dangerous paths in trying to dispose of them to the British marines. One or two of these men had engaged "Davee" to row them out one dark night to the British boat that they might dispose of some of their merchandise. When they were a few minutes out from their secret starting place and around in the south cove, there was a command to "Halt!" It was given by that familiar and ever watchful commander of the "fort" Col. Tully, who was also guarding the coast in that neighborhood. Davee paid no attention to the command but pulled a mighty and quickened stroke with his oars. Again Col. Tully shouted "Halt!" but Davee was obdurate. The colonel then ordered one of his men to take aim and he then shouted "Halt! or I will fire," but Davee had by this time pulled well into the shore, and still he pulled for his life. The command to fire was given, but the bullet missed its aim, struck the handle of the oar just between Davee's hands. The next instant the boat grounded on shore and its occupants disappeared in the bushes at a very rapid gait. Davee died unm.

Mrs. Whittlesey also inherited great stature and physical powers undoubtedly from her father, Martin Kellogg, as it is related that on one occasion "with an infant on her hip" she carried under the other arm out of church a furious woman who in that place attempted to quarrel with one who had married the man of her choice. In 1761, Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey, with their children, moved to Washington, Conn. They united with the church the same year. Mr. Whittlesey was soon after chosen "deacon." Mrs. Dorothy (Kellogg) Whittlesey d. in Washington, Conn., on the 14th of April, 1772, much lamented, as her life had been full of the virtues that crown the life of a loving wife and most devoted mother. Mr. Whittlesey m. on the 23d of June, 1774, Hannah, widow of Samuel Mallory, of New Milford and Kent. Mr. Whittlesey was appointed a member of the General Assembly from Kent, Conn., in May, 1775, also at a special session held at Hartford by the order of the Governor, called to provide for the defense and safety of the inhabitants and to supply troops. Mr. Whittlesey's death occurred July 12, 1786, at Washington, Conn. Mrs. Hannah Whittlesey survived him. [Colonial Records of Connecticut, Vol. 40, May, 1776, p. 365; May, 1775.]

HOME OF ELIPHALET AND DOROTHY (KELLOGG) WHITTLESEY, No. 41, WHITTLESEY VALLEY, NEW PRESTON, CONN.

MEMORANDA

41. Mr. Eliphalet Whittlesey was commissioned by the General Assembly on the 13th of October, 1748, to be ensign of the 10th company or trainband in the 6th Regiment of the Colony of Connecticut. On the 9th of May, 1751, was commissioned lieutenant of the same company and regiment. Wednesday, Mar. 7, 1756, he was appointed and commissioned captain of the 6th Company in the 4th Regiment. Feb. 9, 1757, was commissioned captain of the 10th Company in the 6th Regiment, raised in this Colony. March, 1758, commissioned captain of the 4th Company in the 1st Regiment under Phineas Lyman, colonel; 1759, captain of the 5th Company 1st Regiment; 1760, captain of 5th Company and 1st Regiment. The pay of captain at that time was £6. In 1760, when Eliphalet Whittlesey was appointed, he was placed at the head of a company which was raised on the call for twenty-five hundred men for Maj.-Gen. William Shirley's command, to operate at Crown Point and Iroquois Lake. Captain Eliphalet participated in the battles and remained in service during the war. In the campaign of 1757, which resulted in the surrender of Ft. William Henry to Montcalm's forces, Captain Whittlesey had the command of a picked company of one hundred men, most of which were from Wethersfield, Conn. 1758, Fort Edward was the base of operations and Ticonderoga the objective point. He was always in the thickest of the battles at the head of his companies, which inspired his men to such fighting as can only be done when they are led by the bravest of officers. [Records of the Colony of Connecticut, 1747–61; Trumbull, "History of Hartford, Connecticut," Vol. II.]

Dorothy Kellogg, the wife of Captain Eliphalet Whittlesey, was the daughter of *Capt. Martin Kellogg, born in 1685, a man remarkable for bodily strength and firmness of mind. He was often employed by the government as interpreter of the Indian language at the Indian treaties. Commissioned captain in the 6th Company of militia of Wethersfield by the General Assembly, and in 1746 was engaged to be pilot for the expected British fleet in the St. Lawrence. In 1751 was the Colony's agent to Hendericks, chief of the Mohawks, to supply them with clothing as an inducement for their continuing in friendship with New England. He settled in the first society of Wethersfield, and for a season dwelt on the lot east of the Congregational church known as the Lattimer place. During the war known as the Queen Anne's war he was living at Deerfield, Mass., with his father, step-mother, and their three other children. Martin was then eighteen years old. In the evening of Feb. 29, 1704, when the ground was covered with snow, two hundred French and one hundred and fifty Indians, under command of Hutel de Ronville, after a march of nearly three hundred miles, fell suddenly upon the sleeping inhabitants of Deerfield; a massacre followed. Father Martin Kellogg and his four children were taken prisoners, but Mrs. Kellogg had been concealed in the cellar under a tub, upon which the Indians sat and regaled themselves with whatever they could find to eat. She had escaped from the bed with an infant a few days old, and after secreting the child, had turned the tub over herself. The cries of the child soon attracted the attention of the Indians, who at once seized it and dashed it against the wall. At their departure the Indians set fire to the dwelling, but Mrs. Kellogg escaped, almost naked, and in her bare feet fled through the deep snow two miles to the house then used as a fort. The family was afterwards allowed to return from their captivity. Martin was several times captured by the Indians, but returned before 1714, for Jan. 26, 1714, he was married to Dorothy Chester, born Sept. 5, 1692 (see memoranda), by the Rev. Elisha Williams, first pastor of the church in Newington, and who was called from there to be the first president of Yale College. Subsequently he removed to Newington, where he remained until his death, which occurred Nov. 13, 1758, according to the record on the stone at his grave. Dorothy, his wife, died Sept. 26, 1754. [H. S. Sheldon, "Documentary History of Suffield, Conn.," 1879; "History of Northfield"; "New York Documentary History," Vol. 3; Foot Genealogy.] His father,

Martin Kellogg, was born Oct. 1, 1660, probably at Farmington. He was often employed as an Indian interpreter, and was a very courageous, active man, and a weaver by trade. He survived many captures and much severe treatment by the Indians. He married first, on Dec. 10, 1684,

Ann Hinsdale (see memoranda), born at Hadley, Mass., Feb. 22, 1667, died at Deerfield, Mass., July 19, 1689, by whom he had one child. He was married for the third time in 1732, being then about seventy-five years old, and died ———. His parents were Joseph Kellogg, who it is supposed emigrated to this country about 1638. Settled in Farmington, 1641. Married twice; first, Joanna ———, who died in 1666. He married a second time, and by each wife had nine children. The fifth child by Joanna was named Martin, the first of the long list of Martin Kelloggs.

Dorothy Chester was the daughter of Stephen Chester, born May 26, 1660, married Jemima Treat, daughter of Lieut. James Treat.

Captain John Chester, born Aug. 5, 1635, married February, 1653, Sarah Welles, born in 1631, the daughter of Governor Thomas Welles, the fourth governor of the Colony of Conn., 1655–58. He died Feb. 23, 1698. Mrs. Chester died Dec. 12 or 16, 1698.

Leonard Chester, born July 15, 1610, married in England in 1634, to Mrs. Mary (Sharpe) Wade, born about 1608, the daughter of Nicholas Sharpe. Mr. Chester died in Wethersfield, Conn., Dec. 11, 1648, and the family arms are on his tomb in the old Wethersfield burying-ground. Mrs. Chester died Nov. 30, 1688. His father was John Chester, of Blaby, Eng., who married Dorothy Hooker, who came to America with her brother, the Rev. Thomas Hooker, founder of Hartford, Conn. John Chester died in England, and was the son of Leonard Chester and Bridgetta Sharpe and grandson of Sir Wm. Chester, baronet, of London.

Ann Hinsdale, of Hadley, Mass., was the daughter of Samuel Hinsdale, born at Hadley, Mass., Mar. 5, 1642, married Mehetabel Johnson. They removed to Deerfield, Mass., where he was killed by the Indians Sept. 8, 1675.

Mehetabel Johnson was the daughter of Humphrey Johnson, born in England, son of John Johnson who came from England in the fleet with John Winthrop and his wife Margery, and was a representative in the first General Court, 1634. A member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, 1638. He lived in Roxbury, Conn., where he died Sept. 30, 1659. [Descendants of John Porter, p. 94.]

Dorothy Hooker was the sister of Rev. Thomas Hooker, the founder of Hartford, Conn., and daughter of Thomas Hooker who removed to Mansfield, Eng., and died there in 1654; his wife died in 1631. His father was John Vowell or Hooker, chamberlain of Exeter, 1555. His portrait is in the Town Hall now. He was related to Sir Walter Raleigh and Admiral Sir Francis Drake. He married Anastasia, daughter of Edward Bridgman, and was the son of

Robert Vowell or Hooker and Agnes, daughter of John Dobell, the poet, and grandson of John Vowell or Hooker, mayor of Exeter, 1490, died 1493, who married Alice Drewett, daughter of Ione (Kelley) and Richard Drewett, of Exeter.

42. Samuel Whittelsey (Samuel[12]), b. at Wallingford, Conn., July 10, 1713, the oldest son of the Rev. Samuel, was graduated at Yale College in 1729, held the office of tutor in Yale from 1732 until 1738; A.M. at Yale and Harvard University. It was during the period of his tutorship at Yale that he was invited to the church in Milford, Conn., to settle as colleague pastor with the Rev. Samuel Andrews. He accepted the call, but a large minority of the parish remonstrated against his ordination on the alleged ground that he was an Arminian in his theology, and that his preaching savored too little of Christian experience. The council called to ordain him were divided in their judgment of the case, and his ordination was finally the result of a compromise, which resulted after all in the formation of a second society. He was ordained Nov. 8, 1738, and continued the discharging of his official duties until his death. After the division of the ordination committee there was so much passion in their debate fists were doubled on the occasion. In 1741 they separated from the original church and "built a decent house for worship," 1742. In 1743 they put themselves under the presbytery of New Brunswick, and had to meet with much violent opposition. [Bacon, Conn. Hist. Coll.; Trumbull, "History of Connecticut."; Davis, "History of Wallingford."] Sept. 21, 1743, Mr. Whittelsey married Susanna Newton, born Jan. 14, 1716, the daughter of the Hon. Col. Roger and Susannah (Bryan) Newton (see memoranda). Mr. Whittelsey died, much beloved, 22d October, 1768. Mrs. Whittelsey, who was a lady of high intellectual and moral qualities, afterwards became the wife of Hon. Jabez Hamlin of Middletown, Conn., who was for many years distinguished in civil and military life. [Dexter, "Yale Biographies and Annals."] Mrs. Hamlin d. May 10, 1803. MEMORANDA

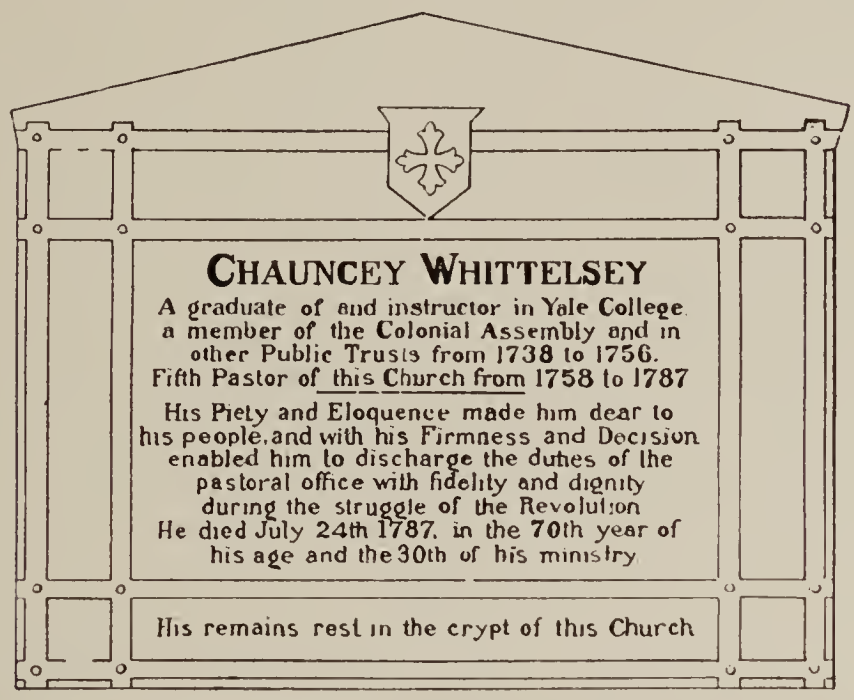
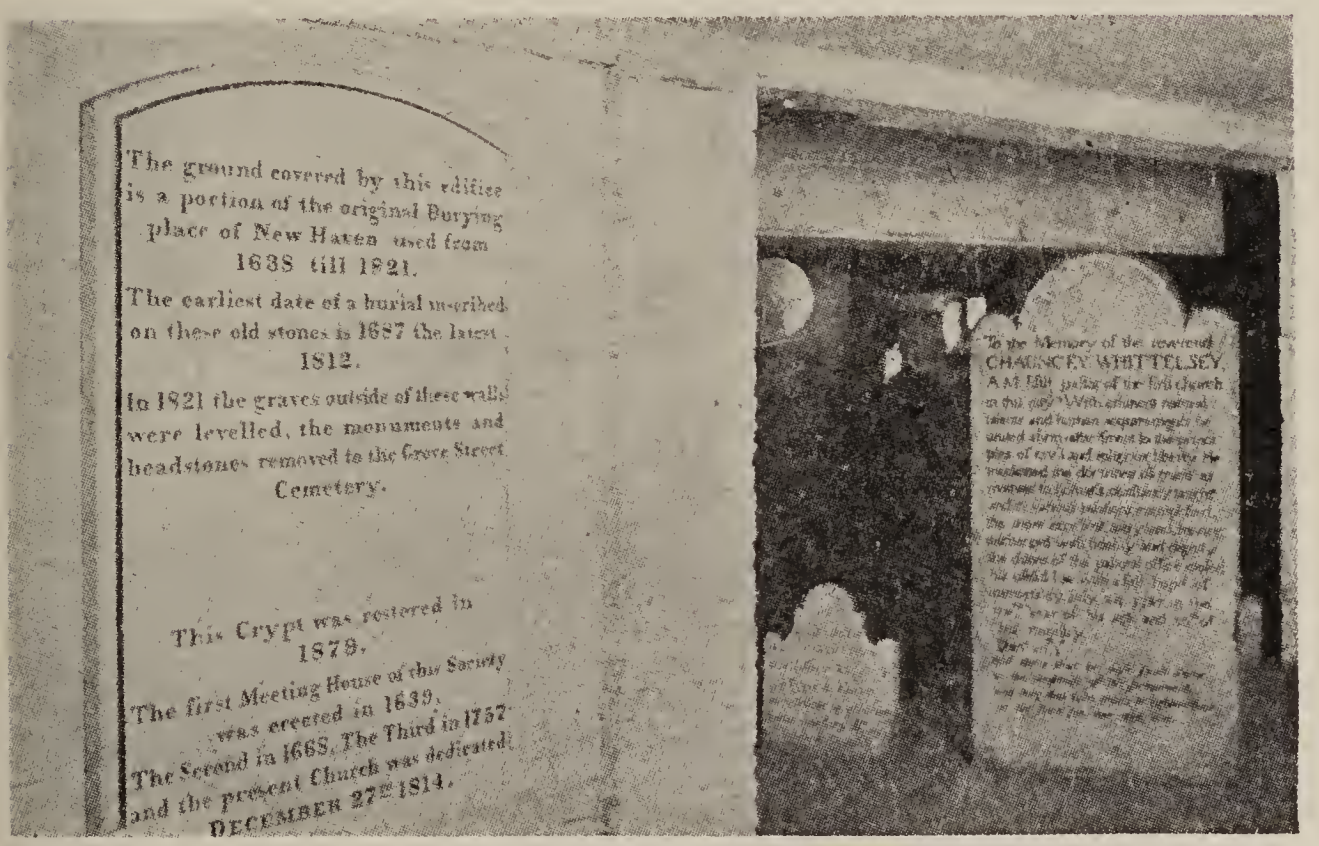
Samuel Whittelsey and was published. He m. in 1691 Mary Lyman, b. 1667, d. 1740, who was the dau. of John Lyman, b. 1623, d. 1690; m. Dorcas Plumbe, dau. of John Plumbe of Wethersfield. John Lyman was the son of Richard Lyman, b. in England, 1580, came with Rev. John Elliott in the ship Lion to Roxbury, Mass., in 1631. He made the journey "through the wilderness" with the Rev. Mr. Hooker and the Rev. Mr. Stone to Hartford in 1636; was an original proprietor there, and d. in 1640. His wife, Sarah Osbon, died shortly afterward. The Hon. John Hall was the son of Samuel Hall, m. in 1668, to Hannah Walker, who was baptized in 1646, the dau. of John and Grace Walker. He went to Wallingford with the first planters in 1670. Samuel Hall was the son of John Hall, born in England, 1605, and died in Wallingford, Conn., 1676; m. in 1641 to Jeanne Wollen, who was b. in England. Mr. John Hall was freed from training in 1665, being in his 60th year, and was in New Haven as early as 1639, and Wallingford in 1670. He died in the year 1676. [Davis, "History of Wallingford."]

44. Chauncey Whittelsey (Samuel[12]), b. at Wallingford, Conn., Oct. 8, 1717. He inherited strong mental powers, which were highly cultivated by education. Graduated at Yale, 1738, and continued his classical studies as resident graduate on Bishop Berkley's foundation. As the resignation of Rector Williams took place in 1739, Mr. Whittelsey was elected a tutor. He served the public in that office for six years, and was concerned in the instruction of four classes, two of which received a greater part of their education under him. During his official connection with the college, the town and all New England were shaken with religious agitation. That very period, Sept. 30, 1740, he was licensed to preach as a candidate for the ministry; before then he was solicited to become a candidate for the settlement of Amity Parish, which he declined, partly because of his college engagements and partly as he considered himself not yet qualified for the work. In reference to that request it was recorded on a leaf of his diary, which was in possession of Dr. Bacon, "Having repeatedly commended my case to God by prayer, and, I think, strictly and impartially examined myself, I am as yet too little acquainted with God, the Scriptures, human nature in general, and my own heart in particular to venture to undertake the great and important work of the ministry. O God! fit me for that noble and honorable employment if it be thy will that I should be improved in it. Let me not enter upon it without thy direction and blessing. Lord Jesus! Mighty head of the church! fit me for thy service and improve me in thy vineyard. But unless thou go forth with me let me not go forth upon that mighty business. O may I never be an idle spectator or a slothful laborer in the vineyard of my God! May I be willing to spend and be spent in the work of the Lord and for the good and salvation of souls. May I await God's time, be resigned to his will, and have more of the meek and humble spirit of Jesus Christ, be more and more weaned from the world, and live above it, that I may preach the gospel in truth, not influenced by the fears of man; but may I speak the truth boldly in church, and be blessed by his name." Under date of July 6,

1739, he says, "Yesterday was sacrament at which I renewed my covenant, at least externally, with the Lord Jesus Christ, having set apart of the day before preparation by fasting and prayer and examination of my own heart."



TABLET IN NEW HAVEN CHURCH, NEW HAVEN, CONN.



ENTRANCE TO THE CRYPT, NEW HAVEN CHURCH, SHOWING GRAVE OF CHAUNCEY WHITTELSEY, No. 44

It is this man of whom David Brainard declared, "He has no more grace than a chair," and Peabody in his life of Brainard said in regard to this language that it was "a phrase which that individual justified by his subsequent proceedings." Chauncey explains this by saying that, "This remark of Brainard was characteristic of that rash pharisaical and censorious spirit which many of the 'new lights' at this time exhibited." This ebullition of indecent censoriousness afterwards was repented of, and only proved at the time the extreme piety was a type that Brainard, inexperienced and blinded by spiritual pride as he was, could not appreciate. [Peabody, "Life of Brainard."]

In 1745 Mr. Whittelsey resigned his office in the college and married Miss Elizabeth Whiting, on the 23d of September, 1745. Miss Whiting was born June 8, 1717, the dau. of Joseph and Hannah (Trowbridge) Whiting. Mr. Whittelsey settled in New Haven as a merchant. He continued in business for ten years. During this period he was an active member of the church and society. He represented the town in the General Assembly of the Colony, and in a variety of public trusts he discharged himself with fidelity and growing influence. He was again called to preach, and settled as associate with Mr. Noyes. A council was called and declared against the ordination of Mr. Whittelsey or any other candidate. The next day the council decided to separate the work of the gospel and ministry and inducted him into the pastoral office over the first church and congregation of New Haven. [Chapman's Trowbridge.]

His ministry, begun in the fortieth year of his age and under circumstances so unauspicious, was long, peaceful, and, for the age, prosperous. "He applied to theological studies and the duties of the pastoral office with an ardor, zeal, and assiduity equaled by few. His affability and dignity of manners, philanthropy, and integrity, joined to an accurate knowledge of men and the affairs of life, commanded esteem and veneration." [Bacon, "Historical Discourses."]

MEMORANDA

President Stiles said of Rev. Mr. Whittelsey, "He was an excellent classical scholar, well acquainted with three learned languages, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, also geology, mathematics, natural philosophy, and astronomy, also with a cyclopedia of an academic life, and amassed by reading a great treasure of wisdom. In literature he was in his day oracular at college, for he taught with facility and success in every branch of knowledge." Dr. Dana says of him, "He wished not to exceed seventy years. According to his desires his usefulness as well as his life was protracted to this period. When the close came he closed the scene with the same serenity and constancy as he had ever lived. He was ready to be offered, having like comfortable reflections in the reviews of his life and ministerial warfare as the holy Apostle, and a like prospect of a crown of righteousness. His old age was amiably splendid as a clear setting sun. His past days looked back upon him with a smile of friendship, and the morning of immortal felicity dawning of his soul, gloriously irradiated the valley of death. We saw the aged saint commend his soul to God, full of faith, looking up steadfastly to heaven, seeing the glory of God and Jesus on the right hand. He had for a long time expressed habitually a full assurance of hope, a confidence that knew no fear of dying. Mr. Stiles was desirous to see the triumph of that confidence. He came into the room just as death was beginning. Taking his friend's hand he said, "Do you feel now the assurance of hope? If you would say yes, and cannot speak, answer me by the pressure of your hand." The aged saint rallied his dying strength, and with a struggle distinctly answered "Yes."

The printed sermons of Rev. Chauncey Whittelsey are: Connecticut election, 1778; ordination of John Hubbard, 1769; funeral of Isaac Stiles, 1760; death of Abigail Noyes, 1768; at New Haven, 1744.

MEMORANDA

A council was called to "settle" Rev. Mr. Dana, and a consociation to prevent his ordination met in Wallingford the same day, Oct. 11, 1758.

The council denied the jurisdiction of the consociation and "settled" him, but his pastoral relations were dissolved by that body. It was a controversy between the "old lights" and the "new light" parties. Mr. Dana was understood to belong to the liberal school. In 1768, he was honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of Edinburgh. 1789 called to the pastoral charge of the First church of New Haven. His health failed in 1804. He retired July 30, 1805. He manifested his feelings at being snubbed so curtly by always afterward attending public service at the College chapel. In his old age he was recollected as personally a mere shadow of a man, tall, slender, and ghastly. His prayers at communion service in the chapel were remarkably long, solemn, reverential, and impressive. He was trustee of Yale College, and an engraving of him adorns the historical discourses of Rev. Dr. Bacon.

He m. (1) Katherine Whittelsey; (2) Abigail Porter, on the 10th of July, 1796; she d. Mar. 17, 1798; (3) he m. Mary Miles, Sept. 14, 1798; she d. Dec. 31, 1831, age 91 years. MEMORANDA

187. Parnell Whittelsey's name is found as Parke (?) Whittelsey on the muster roll of Connecticut men in the War of 1812 as private, serving from June 8, 1813, to June 17; June 20, 1813, to June 25, 1813; in Jonathan Wheeler's company, Apr. 1, 1814, to May 10, 1815, in Commander Noah T. Ferry's 37th Infantry.

76. Elizabeth Tulley was the daughter of John Tulley, b. Mar. 18, 1702; d. Oct. 29, 1776; and Parnell Kirtland, b. 1704; d. 1748.

John was the son of William Tulley, b. Jan. 5, 1676, and d. July 5, 1744; m. Abigail Maverick of Boston, the daughter of a clergyman who left England in the time of the religious persecutions, Rev. Elias Maverick, and his wife, Margaret Sherwood. It appears that she came from Cornwall in company with a brother who settled in Little Chaptauk, Md. Rev. Elias was the son of Elias and Anne (Harris) Maverick.

William was the son of John Tulley, b. about 1626; m. in 1671 to Mary Beaumond, the daughter of William Beaumond (see memoranda), a native of Carlisle, in the county of Cumberland, on the border of Scotland, who came to America in the capacity of the "tailor" to Sir Richard Saltonstall. [New England Historical and Biographical Register, Vol. 3, p. 161.] John Tulley settled in Potapaugh in 1680. He purchased of Robert Say a little house and lot on the "town plot," about three-quarters of a mile westward of a nook of Salt meadow. He published almanacs from 1682 to 1702. (One of the almanacs is now in possession of Mr. John C. Whittlesey[1149], Rockville, Conn.; see illustration, page 59. It descended to him from John Whittelsey[2], the first-born Whittelsey in America.) His last almanac was published in Boston after his death, which occurred Oct. 5, 1701. Mr. John Tulley was also town clerk at Saybrook, and supported his family almost entirely by teaching arithmetic, navigation, and astronomy. [Transactions of the American Antiquarian Society, Vol. 5, p. 75.] It is said of him that he was a true Christian. His father was John Tulley, the first of the name to come to America (from the parish of Horley, county of Surrey, twenty miles from London, Eng.), with his wife, Sarah Fenner, a sister of the first William Fenner in this country, who settled at Providence, R. I. The Tulleys were monks in early days. [New England Historical Register.]

Parnell Kirtland was the daughter of John and Lydia (Pratt) Kirtland, who was the son of Nathaniel Kirtland, b. 1616, and grandson of Philip Kirtland. Lydia Pratt, b. 1659, who married John Kirtland, was the daughter of Lieut. William Pratt, the first settler who went to Saybrook, and attended the General Court as a deputy twenty-three times, the last time at Hartford, May 9, 1678. He married Elizabeth Clark, daughter of John Clark. His father was Rev. William Pratt, rector of the parish of Stevenage, in Hertfordshire, Eng.; b. 1562. His wife's name was Elizabeth. His father was Andrew Pratt, son of Thomas and Joan Pratt of Baldock, Eng.

Mary Beamond (b. in 1647, m. John Tully) was the daughter of William Beamond and Lydia Danforth, who were married Dec. 9, 1643. Lydia Danforth was the daughter of Nicholas Danforth, Cambridge, county of Suffield (d. 1638), and Elizabeth Symmes, d. 1629. [Savage.]

William Tully, b. 1676, was set to watch over a mass of contraband articles which had been taken from the Tories and put in the house formerly owned by John Whittlesey. On a certain night eight Tories came to the house and demanded entrance. Tully begged to be excused from opening the door. They broke in without further parley, and rushed forward. Tully's flint was faithful, and the hammer struck fire. The musket ball passed through the first man, and, to Tully's surprise, he still advanced; but the man back of him dropped dead. He then scared the other six men off. The first man then dropped dead, with one hand on the window and the other grasping a chest of tea. [Mrs. E. W. Kirtland, Saybrook.]

Thomas Buckingham, who married Esther Hosmer in 1646, and who was the son of the first settler of the name in this country, Thomas Buckingham, a Welchman, who first went to New Haven and removed to Milford in 1639. [Rev. F. W. Chapman, A.M., "The Buckingham Family," 1872.]

80. *Azariah (Ambrose[25]), b. Feb. 2, 1741/2, under the same roof that had sheltered his great grandfather and mother, John and Ruth. Mr. Azariah Whittelsey served his apprenticeship in assisting his father at "the ferry." Without a doubt, he studied navigation to a considerable extent and became perfectly familiar with the sailing ground, both in the river and sound. In 1763, he married Elizabeth Williams, b. Dec. 29, 1747. August, 1776, a ship was built at Saybrook, by order of the "General Assembly of the Colony of Connecticut," and passed over the bar; the largest with which this "old Neptune Rib" had ever the honor of trying conclusions. This ship was first described as the "Colony ship," afterward the frigate Oliver Cromwell.

In the same season three other towns raised the 7th Regiment for the Continental Army. In the May previous, so zealous were they, that an appeal was made to the legislature and granted, for building a fort on the site of the old one, to contain six carriage guns for the defense of the town and river interests. With the work of ship building and fort raising in addition to sending men away to the frontier lines of service, the eventful year of 1776 was filled for them with sacrifice and the true and noble spirit of the Revolution. The building of the ship was a matter of universal concern. Beginning in January, 1776, the Colonial Records are replete with solicitude about that boat. Mr. Azariah Whittelsey was appointed master of the Oliver Cromwell by the General Assembly in July, 1776, that eventful month, never to be forgotten, and honored until the end of time. The frigate was used for cruising on the Connecticut River and on Long Island Sound, for coast defense. "Whether she on high seas, kept up the notoriety begun on the stays, cannot be reported, but as Azariah Whittelsey was her master, it is safe to say she never ran from the enemy's fire." [Saybrook in the Revolution; Colony of Connecticut Records.]

Mr. Whittelsey was drowned at the ferry Apr. 9, 1806. Mrs. Whittelsey died May 22, 1823, amid a large circle of friends who loved her dearly for her sterling qualities. Their home was one of perpetual sunshine. Their children were born in the old homestead, as follows:

John was shot through the forehead at his post; Stephen was killed by a bayonet thrust during the massacre about the doors of the magazine. Tradition says that they were barbarously bayoneted after death. [Battle of Groton Heights, Allyn, 1882.] Their burial place is not definitely known, but it is highly probable it is near that of their elder brother, Joseph[86], whose monument is found in the cemetery at Westbrook village.

Feb. 28, 1762, at the church in Newington; it is, therefore, to be supposed that he did not move to Washington, Conn., until after his father had settled there. Martin served for a short term in the war of the Revolution; while with the troops defending New York he lost the use of his limbs and never fully recovered; his name is found on the "list of pensioners, invalid, printed in the Senate Document of the first session 23d Congress, 1833–34." The names were placed on the list at various times soon after the war and represent soldiers and officers who were wounded or disabled. [List of Invalid Pensioners in Record of Connecticut Men in the War of the Revolution, 1812, and War with Mexico, Adjutant-General's office, Hartford, Conn., 1889.] Mrs. Sarah Deming Whittlesey was a descendant of John Deming of Wethersfield, Conn. 122. *Lemuel (Eliphalet[41]), b. in Newington, Conn., May 16, 1740. Mr. Whittlesey lived quietly on the farm in this district until he was old enough, and his father called him to take part in the Colonial Wars. Lemuel became a teamster and was in the army at the front on Lake Champlain. It is said that he had but one shirt with him during this campaign, and when it became too much soiled was obliged to take it off and wash it in the lake, and then conceal himself among the bushes while it dried. While this operation was in process on one very bright day, a camp-thief stole the garment and ran. The shirtless Lemuel pursued the rascal with much vigor, but when he was caught the precious shirt had been thrown away. Like all the sons of Eliphalet[41], having an athletic frame, he seized the culprit and stripped him of his own, which he immediately put on, then returned to his company. [Col. Charles Whittlesey, "Military Record of the Descendants of John Whittelsey and Ruth Dudley."] Mr. Whittlesey was at Havana (Cuba) in 1762, when the Morro Castle was bombarded. He saw the explosion of the magazine, and could distinctly hear the screams of the inmates of the fort. At this time he was not a soldier but a trader or sutler. November 15, 1764, Lemuel Whittlesey married Hannah Wells, b. Apr. 22, 1742, the daughter of Robert Wells. Mr. Whittlesey again settled down to farm life in Newington, Conn., which was a part of Wethersfield. On the 25th of August, 1765, Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey acknowledged their baptismal covenant at the church in Newington and afterward took great interest in the affairs of the church. They are mentioned as members of the church by Rev. Joshua Belden in 1780. Mr. Whittlesey was one of the "seaters" at that time, he was also one of a "committee to loan money for the schools"; 1781 one of a "committee of the society"; "one of a committee for looking into the state of the parsonage, and of the Kensington moneys," reappointed in 1782; 1785, one of a "committee to meet the committee from the General Court to appoint the place for the new meeting-house to stand." [Whittlesey Memorials.] In May, 1779, Lemuel was commissioned by the General Assembly as lieutenant of the 5th company or trainband in the 6th regiment of the state of Connecticut. [Colonial Records of Connecticut, 1779.] Mrs. Whittlesey d. Apr. 3, 1810; Mr. Whittlesey d. Aug. 30, 1823. They had the following children:

301 Asaph, b. July 13, 1778; d. Jan. 7, 1780.
302+Asaph, b. Apr. 7, 1782; m. Laura Kellogg.

MEMORANDA

298. Lemuel was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun.

300. Chauncey's wife, Miss Willard, was the daughter of John Willard of Lenox, Mass. who m. the granddaughter of Lord Darcy, Earl of Rivers, and came early in the century from Kent to New England. They had no children. [Miss Elector F. Jones, "Stockbridge Past and Present," 1854, p. 126.]

123. John (Eliphalet[41]), b. at Newington, Conn., Dec. 23, 1741; removed in 1761 with his father to New Preston, Conn. Mr. Whittlesey left a diary which was in existence in 1856; by its contents we know that he served as a servant to his father, Eliphalet[41], in the Colonial Wars. On the 9th of May, 1756, he assisted in forwarding stores from Connecticut to Greenbush, opposite Albany, N. Y. At Goshen he caught the measles while sleeping in a barn with other soldiers. His discharge shows that he served three years in his father's company. [Col. Charles Whittlesey, "Military Record of the Descendants of John Whittlesey and Ruth Dudley."] On the 14th of November, 1765, Mr. Whittlesey m. Mary Beale, who was born at New Preston, Conn., Aug. 24, 1745. From the memoranda left by Mr. Whittlesey, we find that the "spirit of the times" and "safety of the people," predominated above all else in his mind, and after his placing his farm in such perfect working order, between 1760 and 1775 he gave almost his entire attention to protecting the people of his colony. In 1776 he was called out as private in Captain Tibbets' company; Aug. 18 to Sept. 14, 1776, at New York, in Capt. John Hinman's company; Oct. 28 he marched to Stamford, Conn., in Captain Moseley's company; Nov. 6, found the regiment at Horse Neck; Nov. 12, marched to Rye; Dec. 2, was at Saw Pitts, under Gen. Wooster; Mar. 21, 1777, was commissioned ensign by Jonathan Trumbull, when he served as such in the regiment of Lieut.-Col. N. Parsons. As one of the selectment of New Preston he recruited the quota of men for that society, collected and forwarded supplies and ammunition. [Colonial Records of Connecticut Men in the Revolution.] Dec. 3, 1769, Mr. Whittlesey consecrated his life to God. A copy of his consecration and resolution is here given as taken from his original letter. June 20, 1779, he made a public profession of his faith.

Eternal and ever blessed God, I desire to present myself before thee with the deepest humiliation & abasement of soul, sensible how unworthy such a sinful worm is to appear before the holy Majesty of Heaven, the king of kings and the Lord of Lords, and especially on such an occasion as this, even to enter into a covenant transaction with thee, but the scheme and plan is thine own, thine infinite condescention hath offered it by thy Son, and thy grace hath inclined my heart to accept it. I come therefore acknowledging myself to have been a great offender smiting on my breast, and saying with the humble publican, God be merciful to me a sinner. I come invited by the name of thy son, and wholly trusting in his perfect riteousness, entreating that for his sake thou wilt be merciful to my unrighteousness and wilt no more remember my sins. Receive, I beseech thee, thy revolted creature who is now convinced of thy right to him, and desires nothing so much as that he may be thine. This day do I, with the utmost solemnity, surrender myself to thee. I renounce all former lords that have had dominion over me, and I consecrate to thee all that I have, and all that I am. The faculties of my mind, the members of my body, my wordly possessions my time and my influence over others to be all and entirely for thy glory, and resolutely employed in obedience to thy command as long as thou continuest in me life. With an ardent desire, and a humble resolution to continue thine, through all the endless ages of eternity, ever holding myself in an attentive posture to observe the first intimations of thy will, and ready to spring forward with zeal and joy to the immediate execution of it. To thy direction also I resign myself and all I have and am, to be disposed of by thee in such a manner as thou shalt, in thine infinite wisdom judge most subservient to the purposes of thy glory. To thee I leave the management of all events and say, without reserve not my will, but thine be done, rejoicing with a loyal heart in thine unlimited government as what ought to be the delight of the whole rational creation. Use me O Lord, I beseech thee, as an instrument of thy service. Number me among thy peculiar people, let me be washed in the blood of thy dear Son; let me be clothed with his riteousness, let me be sanctified by his spirit. Transform me more and more unto his image, impart to me, through him, all needful influence of thy purifying, cheering and comforting Spirit, and let my life be spent under those influences, and in the light of thy gracious countenance, as my Father and my God, and when the solemn hour of Death comes, may I remember this thy covenant, well ordered in all things and sure, as all my salvation and all my desire, tho' every other hope and enjoyment is perishing, and do thou, O Lord remember it too. Look down with pity, O my heavenly father, on thy languishing dying child—embrace me in thine everlasting arms, put strength and confidence in my departing spirit, and receive it to the abodes of them, that sleep in Jesus, peacefully and joyfully to wait the accomplishment of thy great promise to all thy people, even of a glorious resurrection and of eternal happiness in thine heavenly presence. And if any surviving friend should, when I am in the dust, meet with this memorial of my solemn transactions with thee, may he make the engagement his own—an do thou graciously admit him to partake in all the blessings of thy covenant through Jesus, the great mediator of it. To whom with thee, O Father, and thy Holy Spirit be everlasting praise, ascribed by all the millions who are thus saved by thee and by all those other Celestial Spirits in whose work and blessedness thou shalt call them to share. Amen.

JOHN WHITTLESEY (L S)

He made a public profession June 20, 1779."

After the Revolution Mr. Whittlesey was a justice of the peace, and was re-elected to the Connecticut Legislature for seventeen consecutive sessions, and was also a member of the Committee of Safety. He was chosen deacon of the church in 1784, but declined to act; was chosen and made a member of the convention to ratify the Constitution of the United States, for which he gave his vote Jan. 3, 1788. Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey removed to Salisbury, Conn., in 1792. Salisbury was then a new settlement. Mrs. Whittlesey died Sept. 30, 1802. Mr. Whittlesey d. Mar. 22, 1812.

MEMORANDA

An effort was made one night by the Tories to capture Ensign Whittlesey at his house on the Shepaug. They called him out of his bed, pretending to have lost their way. Knowing them by their voices, Mr. Whittlesey took his gun, opened the door, and invited them to come in. They concluded to find their route without his assistance, and made haste to get away. Such was the courage of Mr. Whittlesey. [Col. Charles Whittlesey, "Military Record of Descendants of John Whittlesey and Ruth Dudley."] There are many anecdotes related of his personal influence over the pioneers of Salisbury, which often took the form of authority. The following is a copy of the commission of ensign given to Mr. Whittlesey, by which he served in the war of the Revolution:

located at the junction of several cross roads on the line of travel to New York, West Point, Hartford, Boston, and other large towns.

Maj. William Cogswell was the first to initiate revolutionary measures in resistance of English oppression. He was justice of the peace, major in the State militia, captain in the Army of the Revolution, promoted to rank of major in May, 1781. He was in command under Gen. George Washington in the retreat from Long Island. He died in the prime of life, leaving a widow and nine children. Built Cogswell tavern. His estate was large. General Washington and many of the principal officers of the Revolution were at different times entertained at Maj. Cogswell's tavern, and soldiers by the scores and hundreds. When the treason of Arnold was communicated to Washington, and he was at a point where he must pass through New Preston, early the next morning he dispatched a page, who was dressed in yellow flannel, to Maj. Cogswell's to have breakfast ready promptly at six o'clock. He reached there at that time and gave his suite fifteen minutes for breakfast. Washington's agitation was such that he himself did not sit down, but took a bowl of milk and walked the room while eating.

One morning after the previous day's fatigue the cooks were sitting down to breakfast, and one said, "I hope we shall be permitted to eat in peace for once." Just then an officer came galloping up announcing that three hundred soldiers wanted breakfast at once.

Maj. Cogswell was much from home during the war, and his wife was left to manage the affairs in his absence. It is said of the Tories who lived in the neighborhood that, in the absence of Maj. Cogswell, they would say, "News has just come that Maj. Cogswell is dead; he was killed in the last battle; and now is a good time for Tories." More than once, sick of their impertinence, she armed herself with a chain and cleared the house in quick time. In later life she was wont to say, "I never feared a Tory."

As a magistrate Maj. Cogswell sometimes married people. A couple from the old country, whom he had married not long before, came into his yard one day and wished to be unmarried. He said, "I'll do it." They stood near by a block and cleaver. "Here," he said, "whichever of you wishes to be unmarried, put your head on this block and I will cut it off; that will do it." They stared at him, then looked at each other, and at last one of them timidly asked, "Is there no other way?" He said, "No." They concluded not to be unmarried.

HOME OF ELIPHALET AND COMFORT (WALLER) WHITTLESEY, No. 126, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

126. Eliphalet (Eliphalet[41]), b. July 2, 1748, in Newington, Conn., farmer, Stockbridge; m. Dec. 25, 1771, Comfort Waller, b. Nov. 15, 1750, Kent, Conn.

Eliphalet removed with his wife to Stockbridge, Mass., where they erected their new home. During its construction, the War of the Revolution was reaching its crisis, and Comfort, realizing the necessity of her husband's presence with those who were to save the honor of their country, assisted her husband in constructing their house by carrying the plaster for the chimney, and also by plastering one of the rooms, so that it would be sufficiently completed before cold weather set in, that Eliphalet could join the regiment. Having no glass for her window frames, Comfort oiled paper for her windows, and Eliphalet went to serve his country and honor. Stockbridge was then in the wilds of Massachusetts, and frequent incursions were made by the Indians, so that she had not only a lonely but dangerous and anxious time of waiting. Eliphalet served in Capt. Ezra Whittelsey's company, 3d Berkshire Regiment. When the regiment returned to Boston, in the fall of that year, it reached that city on Saturday. There being no stage going West until Monday, Eliphalet walked home and found twins awaiting him.

His service was in October of 1780. [Letter of Wm. M. Olin, Secretary of Commonwealth of Massachusetts, May 29, 1897; Letter date, Sept. 9, 1892; Revolutionary Muster Rolls, Vol. 24, p. 44.]

State of Connecticut, } ss.
County of Litchfield }

To whom it may concern:

This may certify that I am the author of the History of Ancient Woodbury, Conn., that I am 77 years old; that the first volume of said work was published in 1854; that in the preparation of said work, I had access to the military rolls of two successive Colonels of the 13th Regiment of Connecticut Colony Military, 8 companies of which belonged to ancient Woodbury. This regiment was subject to calls for short terms at any and all times of alarm, as at Danbury and White Plains. The Colonels kept duplicates of the pay rolls of these terms of service. I copied from these rolls a large number of the names of those who served for my roll of men, who enlisted from ancient Woodbury, and printed them in the list in the latter part of my said first volume. In that list is the name of David Whittlesey. See page 787 of Cothren's History of Ancient Woodbury, Conn.

Witness my hand and notarial seal at Woodbury, Feb. 3, 1897.

Signed,

[SEAL.] WILLIAM COTHREN,

128. *Asaph (Eliphalet[41]), b. at Newington, Conn., May 12, 1753; he m. Oct. 1775, Abigail Skeels, who was bap. at New Milford, Aug. 31, 1755.

Oct. 25, 1775, the General Assembly commissioned Asaph Whittlesey to be Ensign of the 3d company or trainband in the 24th Regiment of this colony. [Colony of Connecticut Records.] In May, 1777, he was commissioned Captain of the same company and regiment in this state. This company was raised at Plymouth for the state service in the Wyoming Valley, where occurred on the Susquehannah River above Wilkesbarre, Pa., in July, 1778, an event well known wherever Campbell's poem "Gertrude of Wyoming" has been read. Few death scenes and few conflicts embrace so many horrible details. The Confederate Congress paid little attention to the frontier settlers of the valley, partly from the want of troops, and in part because they were regarded by the Pennsylvanians as intruders. The state had a claim to so much of the colony of Pennsylvania as lies north of the 41st parallel of north latitude. She had issued land script to her citizens and soldiers who located there and organized a county which was republican in the Assembly. As soon as spring opened in the year of 1778, the British tories and Indians from the north began to harass this isolated colony. The usual distress of the border settlements occurred. Here persons were fired upon from the woods, and, if killed, were scalped and mutilated. The settlement had furnished two companies to the Continental army. Self-defense being the highest law of our nature, the officers of one company resigned; most of the privates deserted and hastened home to protect their substance and their families. In May the enemy had collected their forces at Elmira, N. Y., under the command of Col. John Butler, Col. John Johnson, and Thayendanegea or Brandt. As usual in Indian wars, there was to every group of families a station or block house, often called a fort, where they collected in case of alarm. The uppermost station was known as Fort Jenkins, which was captured by the British under Col. John Butler, on the 2d of July. Left to their own resources, the militia and all citizens who were able to fight assembled at a station a few miles below on the west bank of the river known as "Forty Fort." Capt. Hewett and his absconding continentals, Capt. Asaph Whittlesey and forty-four men from Plymouth, and four other companies from the local militia, represented about three hundred men who were organized as a battalion. Col. Zebulon Butler was placed in command with Col. Dennison, Col. Durkee, and Lieut.-Col. Dorrance as field officers. The company, officers, and most of the men were clamorous for an advance. With the excitement, contrary to their judgment, the field officers were overruled. A forward movement took place immediately, and about noon the enemy was found near Fort Wintermont. Col. Zebulon Butler formed his line of battle at right angles to the river, its right near the bank. They advanced, firing occasionally, until within one hundred yards of the British line, which lay flat upon the ground according to Indian tactics, and did not return fire. Brandt was not present. Captain Whittlesey occupied the extreme left at a swamp, in front of which Gienwahtoh, a Seneca chief, had the position suited to his savage troops. He begged to the British commander to be allowed to raise the war whoop and fall upon the flank. At this moment the crack of their guns and the infernal yell of his Indians rang through the woods. The British and tories rising, joined the attack. There were already Indian scouts well around toward the rear of both flanks. Col. Dennison, who commanded the left, directed Capt. Whittlesey to change front to rear in order to face Gienwahtoh; but some of his men regarded it as a retreat, confusion was inevitable, and the savages at once pressed up to the disorganized mass. To this time the Americans were making a serious impression on the British lines with a good prospect of success. The officers appear to have behaved with uncommon courage and energy. Their men still continued fighting, well knowing the desperate consequences of defeat. Every company lost its captain. Ammunition, as usual in such engagements, began to fail, a disorderly retreat commenced about four o'clock, P. M., followed by one of those human butcheries which are not common in war, and which has not yet ceased to shock mankind. The tories, many of them from Pennsylvania and New Jersey, personal acquaintances and often relatives of the settlers, exhibited more of the savage than the savages themselves. With Indians scalping, mutilation, and torture, are a part of the usages of war. The fugitives running and skulking through the forest were tomahawked, maimed, and murdered until the sun went down. Fortunate were those who fell dead on the line of battle, for they were insensible to torture and the insults put upon their bodies by allies of Great Britain. Two hundred and twenty-seven were killed or murdered, five saved as prisoners, and one hundred and forty escaped. How many were made orphans and widows on that day in the beautiful valley of Wyoming with the distress of soul and body that followed, are subjects not belonging to statistics, but to the imagination. Forced to its utmost capacity we shall fail to conceive the full measure of their sorrows. Most of the houses were burned, their crops destroyed, and their horses and cattle taken by the enemy. To them there was only left a choice of dispersion or starvation. [Col. Charles Whittlesey, "Military Records of the Descendants of John Whittelsey and Ruth Dudley."] Captain Whittlesey d. at the head of his men, July 3, 1778.

A newspaper of New Haven announced June 13, 1786, as follows: "At a late city meeting John Chandler was elected sheriff." When the War of the Revolution broke out Mr. Chandler had prospects of success in business, but soon his father's family took sides with the adherents of their King and left New Haven, he alone remaining. But he felt wounded, and the unjust suspicions of the Whigs, and that a certain degree of disloyalty would be attached to him on account of the course taken by the rest of his family; he was a man of great pride and ambition, but the breaking up of society and his family discouraged him. His success in business must have been small, for his family was broken up and his third child taken from home by her maternal grandmother so young and kept away so long and persistently that there were born to her five brothers and sisters of whom she could not, at one time, say that she had seen either of them, although living in the next town. He d. Jan. 16, 1805. Mrs. Chandler d. July 1, 1803. Their remains with those of some of their children were interred in the cemetery at New Haven, near the monument of their relative, Rev. Jas. Resolved, That we have received with deep regret information of the death of the venerable Matthew B. Whittlesey, Esq., who, for many years, presided at our meetings as the senior member of this Bar, and was ever one of our most valuable and esteemed associates.

Resolved, That his amiable deportment, his great firmness of purpose, and his unblemished integrity, had justly acquired for him the regard and respect of the community, and more especially of the profession, who were most intimately associated with him, and of the Judicial Tribunals, before which he was a highly respectable advocate, and insure that his name and character will long be remembered and respected.

Resolved, That we sympathize with the family of the deceased in the loss which they have sustained, and that a copy of these resolutions be communicated to them by the secretary.

Resolved, That this Bar will attend the funeral of the deceased at two o'clock this (Tuesday) afternoon, and that his Honor, the Presiding Judge, the jury attending the court, be respectfully invited to unite with us in paying this last tribute of respect to the memory of our departed friend.

Resolved, That these resolutions be signed by the chairman and secretary, and be published in the newspapers.

Signed,
CHARLES HAWLEY,

[Whittlesey Memorials]

Thomas Day of Hartford, Conn., said the deceased was one of the best specimens of the old school, not only in costume but in mind and manners.

The venerable widow of the late Matthew Beale Whittlesey, Esq. (Mrs. Caroline H. Whittlesey), came to a sudden and shocking death on Sabbath evening, Jan. 23, 1848, by burning. She had retired to her room, and had put on her night clothes, and it is supposed that she had been reading a newspaper, and that thus engaged it came in contact with the flame of the lamp, that she threw the paper down, and attempted to smother the blaze with her foot, and that in the effort her clothes took fire and she was enveloped in flames. These reached to the ceiling at the time other members of the family reached her room. She was dreadfully burned and lived but ten hours after the accident. The event caused great sensation in Danbury, where the deceased was so generally known and highly respected.

The departure of these aged friends was felt to be a serious loss, both in the circle of numerous afflicted relatives, and in the church of which they were exemplary and highly esteemed members. Mr. Whittlesey had long been favorably known in public life as a man of stern integrity, sound discretion, and skill in his profession. About the time of his retiring from business he made a public profession of religion, which for sixteen years he honored by a consistent Christian life. But it is remarkable that from the very time of his becoming the head of a family—many years before his conversion, he ever maintained religious worship in his house. He was an example of the manner and principles of a more nearly Puritan age than the present, for which he entertained a profound reverence. His death is for this cause the more melancholy to the admirers of olden times, as it sunders one of the last links of these attachments. But to himself it was doubtless a most blessed change, and he passed through it with calm radiance of a setting sun, without a cloud, to shine again in endless days. For nearly three months did his bereaved companion wait, till her change also came. She had been for the last time to the sanctuary the day before her death. She had spent the Sabbath evening in the cheerful society of her friends, and even made arrangements to attend during the week a female prayer meeting, which she dearly loved, but she was to meet in a nobler worship, there where prayer is changed to praise. Ere she returned that night she had indeed cause to know that her time was near. With surprising suddenness her summons came, and when the next day closed she passed away to join the departed friends in glory and be forever with the Lord. We mourn the absence of her bright example and her fervent spirit here, but we rejoice with her that she now beholds her Father's face and is satisfied to awake with his likeness. [N. 304. John (John[123]), b. at Washington, Conn., Jan. 11, 1767. Mr. Whittlesey "was a farmer, prudent, industrious, and economical. He, however, never was ambitious to obtain earthly wealth, but his great object was to lay up treasures in heaven. He was among the foremost in promoting the objects of benevolence, morality, and religion. He fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and eased the hearts of the disconsolate by his kind attention, advice, and prayers. His attendance on business of the town, or society or ecclesiastical meetings, was punctual and uniform. The moment designated found him at his post. His residence was near five miles from the meeting-house, and, to enable the destitute and to encourage the slothful and careless to attend to hear the Gospel preached, he provided a large wagon to convey eight or ten persons, and before it reached the meeting-house it was generally filled with widows and orphans. The clergy found his house open for their reception, with an abundance to supply their wants. He was so esteemed and beloved by all ranks, ages, and classes as to be generally designated by the familiar and affectionate relationship of Uncle John." [Whittlesey Memorials.] "Few have lived more useful lives, or died more triumphant deaths." He m. 305. Mary Beale Whittlesey (John[123]), b. June 13, 1771, at Washington (New Preston), Conn. In the marriage of Nathaniel Perry Averill and Mary Beale Whittlesey, by Rev. Jeremiah Day of Washington, Conn. (afterward president of Yale College), two of the best known of the ancient families of that town were united. The marriage took place at Salisbury, Conn., on the 25th of September, 1792. Thither the parents of the bride had removed about 1784, and in 1805 she and her husband and five children followed them and found a home on the banks of the Housatonic river, in the northeast part of Salisbury, in the valley of Weatogue. The farm extended from the river to the Twin lakes on the west, and was about three miles from her father's homestead. The father and mother of the Weatogue home were excellent examples of the post-colonial farmer proprietors of New England. Here they improved the hundred-acre farm, planted orchards around the house, built a new house on the new road to Sheffield, held open doors to all visitors, exercised notably all the neighborly functions of those days in sickness and in health, closing each day with household prayer, and not missing a Sunday service in fifty years, although the meeting-house was four miles from home and Smith's hill and Frink's hill lay high between. Here they reared a family of seven children, two of the sons graduating with high honors at Union College, and two of the daughters being trained for teaching. To their grandchildren the old Weatogue homestead was an Eden of pure country delights. To portray the dear familiar place as it used to be in the years just before the Civil War, half hid among the maples, flanked by orchards that were flanked in turn by groves of oak and chestnut, in front the green meadows reaching to the picturesque river, in the center the old-fashioned white house, with green blinds; the bee-haunted garden, yellow with daffodils in spring and with "Golden Sweets" in autumn; the wide-doored barn and cosy stack-yards, the granaries, and wood piles; the great kitchen inside, with its broad, open fireplace, whose white hearth was bright with the cheer of many a Thanksgiving day and winter evening, with its smooth-shelved pantry, savory with cream and curds, and with cheeses ranged in goodly rows, every room free to the romping grandchildren, from the cool, roomy cellar, lined with bins and barrels, to the all-gathering garret paradise of Paradise for rainy days (ah! jewels of memory!)—to embalm all these would be, indeed, to any of those grandchildren a real "labor of love," but one that would take too much space for this book of genealogy. Of their personal traits it has been truly said "that the mother's long life of cheerful activity and bright intelligence was a constant benediction of sunshine and gentleness," and that the father's "good fellowship and racy shrewdness" (he was a formidable athlete in his youth in the county wrestling matches, and a quaint story-teller in his old age) "would afford another of the thousand refutations of the popular modern misconceptions of the true character of the old-fashioned New Englander." About such a hearth clustered all the social, domestic, and civic virtues.

Soon after their deaths, in 1856, the following most just tribute was published by their lifelong friend and townsman, Rev. Jonathan Lee:

> Died at Salisbury, Conn., Oct. 9th, Nathaniel P. Averill, aged 86, and Mary W., his wife, the 3d of August preceding, aged 85. They were born in Washington, New Preston Society, and lived in the marriage relation sixty-four years. They had been members of the Congregational Church in Salisbury forty years. They walked together as heirs of the grace of life, discharging with tender affection and assiduity, with untiring industry and fidelity, the duties of parents, making their home the dwelling of the warmest filial love and friendship, where heart beat responsive to heart in the mutual joys and sorrows of early and mature life. They were eminently given to hospitality, and with much delight welcomed the visits of ministers and Christian acquaintances to the end of their days. They happily exemplified the Christian character in all the relations of life, and secured the esteem and respect of the community in which they lived, while as workers with the friends of Zion they strengthened their hands and encouraged their hearts in every good work. Not far separated, in point of time, at birth and at death, they now sleep in Jesus, and their redeemed spirits, after a lengthened pilgrimage, are with Him to behold His glory.

309. Asaph (John[123]), b. at Washington, New Preston, Conn., Jan. 4, 1781. Removed to Salisbury, Conn., in 1792, with his father. He was a lad of remarkable activity and a fine flow of spirits. Salisbury was a nearly new settlement, and his opportunities for education were anything but what he desired. His physical endurance was very great, but an accident which occurred just before he became of age, impaired his health and crippled him for life. An older brother and he were chopping in the woods, when one of the trees fell upon him, striking him upon the back of the neck. For some time it was thought he was dead and his back broken. This accident so impaired his ability to labor, that it changed the course of his life. He removed to Southington, Conn., and entered into partnership with his brother Chester, as a merchant. On Nov. 26, 1807, he m. at Southington, Conn., Vesta Hart, b. at Southington, Conn., May 16, 1789, the daughter of Col. Samuel Hart, who lived under the shadow of the mountains in the western part of Southington. In person, she was small, active, and pretty. Her physique was not of the hardy material required for the hard life of new settlements. Her disposition was cheerful, and manners attractive. She received the best advantages of early education which a thriving New England town afforded, in the years following the Revolution, in which she afterwards taught three seasons. She was happy in correspondence from her early youth. Quite a voluminous diary is in existence, covering nearly twenty years of her life, which is the best example of her felicity in composition, because it was written without premeditation or restraint. No one who had personal intercourse with her could doubt the genuineness of her piety.

In July, 1812, Asaph came to Tallmadge, Ohio, made a contract for a piece of land at the center, cleared a small part, sowed it to wheat, and then returned to Southington for his family. In the spring of 1813, he started for Ohio with his wife Vesta and two children, Charles and Samuel. On their departure, their neighbors gathered as if to bid them farewell forever, and their good pastor tearfully commended them to God. They made their journey in a four-horse wagon, taking the southern route by way of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, a journey at the time full of trials and hardships. War was then raging in the West. Their neighbors looked upon them with forebodings that they might be the doomed victims of the tomahawk and scalping knife. In passing "the narrows" between Pittsburgh and Beaver, their wagon run off a steep embankment, and turned completely over, so that the wheels were uppermost. His wife and children were beneath the load. Their groans and stifled cries were growing weaker and more faint, when, by a desperate and almost superhuman effort, he succeeded in raising the wagon and load alone, sufficiently to remove some boxes that lay upon Mrs. Whittlesey. She and the children were rescued, but the injuries received impaired her health for the remainder of her life. They were detained some days in consequence of this accident, and did not reach Tallmadge, Ohio, until July (1813), where they were received by the inhabitants with great kindness. Mr. Whittlesey was soon after elected justice of the peace, an office which he held nearly to the close of his life. In 1814, a postoffice was established in Tallmadge, and he was at once appointed postmaster, a place which he held until his death. In 1816, Mr. Whittlesey met with another accident which lamed him for life. At the raising of the log house of Reuben Beach, one of the timbers fell, and grazing his back threw him down with such violence as to break his thigh bone. The injury received at Salisbury had always affected his strength, and the broken limb was never restored. The united effects of these injuries curtailed the amount of labor he was to perform the remainder of his life in spite of his strong constitution and unflinching will. He started a small store, purchasing goods in Pittsburgh and bringing them in wagons to Tallmadge; he also carried on an ashery. In 1818, he embarked in the manufacture of iron, erecting a forge and four refinery fines in Little Cuyahoga. [Western Reserve Historic Society Pamphlets, 1886.] Owing to tariff reductions and no cash payments in 1824, he returned to his farm. In 1825, elected one of the commissioners of the County of Portage, after which he returned to his farm and family, where he found that repose so congenial to his nature. ["Life of Asaph Whittlesey," by Col. Charles Whittlesey, his son, 1886.] The severe labor and trials of a frontier life had brought upon Mrs. Whittlesey premature gray hairs and other evidences of a broken constitution. She went to her rest with perfect resignation, in the fullest confidence of a happy future. Her last words were: "Tell ——— I charge him to meet me at the throne of God," and her spirit departed Dec. 20, 1835. On the 4th day of May, 1836, Mr. Whittlesey m. Mrs. Susan (Fitch) Everett, b. at Bloomfield, Conn., Oct. 29, 1790, dau. of ——— Fitch and niece of John Fitch, the steamboat inventor. She was the widow of Dr. William Everett, whom she m. Aug. 25, 1817. He d. in 1833. Mrs. Everett was a woman of exceptional character with a native good will and of practical benevolence. Mr. Whittlesey closed his long and useful career on the 17th of March, 1842, on the farm which he first purchased in Tallmadge, Ohio. He was by nature and association a person of good habits and religiously inclined; he became a deacon in the church. He was active and judicious, fearing the rebuke of no man, when he believed he was right. He never yielded to policy or expediency. He was a man of strong mind, strong feelings, strong prejudices, strong affections, and strong attachments, yet the whole was tempered with a strong sense of justice and strong religious feelings. His last words were: "It is a great thing to die."

In 1844, Mrs. Susan Whittlesey removed to Sharon, Medina County, and in 1851 returned to Tallmadge. In 1853, she was m. to Capt. Amos Seward, who d. in 1859. And Mrs. Seward departed this life Feb. 18, 1871, in Tallmadge, Ohio. "She was as nearly a Christian as it is possible for mortals to be."

The children were by the first marriage of Mr. Whittlesey to Vesta Hart:

693. Charles (Asaph[309]), was trained to the profession of arms, and had a military record of which he was rightfully proud. It was not on the field of battle that he won the honors he prized most, but in the broader field of science. It is among the heroes who have achieved distinction in grappling with the mysteries of nature, and who have developed means for making life more useful and comfortable, that Colonel Whittlesey would have preferred taking position rather than among those whose distinction comes more of destruction than construction or production. But the exigencies of this work prevent the formation of a distinct scientific department, and the military services of Colonel Whittlesey were such that he could not, without injustice, be omitted from this department of our work.

Charles Whittlesey was b. in Southington, Conn., about midnight of Oct. 4–5, 1808, being the firstborn of Asaph and Vesta. When four years old he was sent to the old red schoolhouse, "to be out of harm's way," while his father was in the Ohio wilderness exploring for a home. The location was found, and in 1813 the family removed to Tallmadge, Summit County, Ohio. Then the young boy trudged from home to the log schoolhouse, south of Tallmadge Center, until 1819. When the frame academy was finished, the eleven-year-old lad attended school in the new building during the winter, and in the summer worked on the farm. This mode of life continued until 1827, when he was appointed a cadet at West Point. During his second year at West Point a fiery Southerner made a personal assault upon a superior officer, the military punishment for which was death. He was condemned by a court-martial to be shot. While the sentence was being forwarded to Washington for approval, the culprit was confined in the cadet prison without irons. Cadet Whittlesey was one evening on post at the door of the prison, and as he passed on his beat, his back being for a moment toward the door, the prisoner, who was a powerful man, sprang out and seized the sentinel's musket from behind. At the same instant the muzzle of a pistol was presented to the ear of the young cadet, with an admonition to keep quiet. This, however, did not prevent him from calling lustily for the corporal of the guard. With usual activity he sprang forward, and the scion of chivalry ran. The guns of the sentinels were not loaded, and the escaping prisoner could not, therefore, be shot; but in the pursuit by Cadet Whittlesey, he had nearly planted a bayonet in his back when the guard seized him.

Mr. Whittlesey graduated in 1831, and became brevet second lieutenant in the Fifth United States Infantry, and in November started to join his regiment at Mackinaw. He did duty through the winter with the garrison at Fort Gratiot. In the spring he was assigned to Green Bay to the company of Captain Martin Scott, so famous as a shot. At the close of the Black Hawk war he resigned from the army; but later he tendered his services to the government during the Seminole and Mexican wars. He then opened a law office in Cleveland, Ohio, and was a part owner and co-editor of the Whig and Herald until 1837, when he was appointed assistant geologist of the State of Ohio. Great and permanent good resulted to the material wealth of the State in the disclosure of the rich coal and iron deposits in Eastern Ohio, thus laying the foundation for the vast manufacturing industries which have made that portion of the State populous and prosperous. At this time he carefully examined and measured several works of the mound builders, and his plans and notes of twenty of these remains were embodied in Davis and Squires, "American Monuments of the Mississippi Valley" (Washington, 1848). From 1847 till 1851 he was engaged by the United States government in making mineralogical and geological survey of the region above Lake Superior and the upper Mississippi. In 1849, 1850, and 1858 he explored the valley of Menominee River from its mouth to the Brulé. His reports were published in 1865. In 1858, 1859, and 1860 the State of Wisconsin secured his services upon the geological survey of that State. In 1861 he abandoned this employment at the first signs of civil war, and became a member of one of the military companies that tendered its services to President-elect Lincoln when he was first threatened in February, 1861. Two days after the proclamation of Apr. 15, 1861, he joined the governor's staff as assistant quartermaster-general. He served in the field in West Virginia with the three-months men as State military engineer with the Ohio troops under Generals McClellan, Cox, and Hill. At Scary Run, on the Kanawha, July 17, 1861, he distinguished himself by intrepidity and coolness during a severe engagement, in which his horse was shot under him. At the expiration of this service, Aug. 15, 1861, he was appointed colonel of the 20th Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and detailed by Gen. Mitchell as chief engineer of the department of Ohio, where he planned and constructed the defenses of Cincinnati. In Dec., 1861, he was ordered to Kentucky with four companies of infantry to suppress the rebel element in several counties. Col. Whittlesey was in command of his regiment at the taking of Fort Donaldson, and was sent North with the prisoners, of whom over ten thousand five hundred were committed to him. In April, 1862, on the second day of the battle of Shiloh, Col. Whittlesey commanded the 3d brigade of Gen. Wallace's division, the 20th, 56th, and 78th Ohio regiments: "It was against the line of that brigade that

Gen. Beauregard attempted to throw the whole weight of his force for a last desperate charge, but he was driven back by the terrible fire that his men were unable to face." Col. Whittlesey was fortunate in escaping with his life, for Gen. Force says: "It was ascertained that the rebels had been deliberately firing at him, sometimes waiting to get a line shot." Col. Whittlesey had for some time been in bad health and contemplating resignation, but deferring it for a decisive battle. Regarding this battle as virtually closing the campaign in the Southwest, and believing the Rebellion to be near its end, he sent it in. Gen. Grant endorsed his application: "We cannot afford to lose so good an officer," Apr. 12, 1862. Col. Whittlesey very soon turned his attention again to explorations in the Lake Superior and upper Mississippi basins. New additions to the mineral wealth of the country were the result of his surveys and researches. He prognosticated, as early as 1848, that the vast prairies of the Northwest would in time become the great wheat region. In 1866, Col. Whittlesey with about twenty other citizens formed the Western Reserve Historical Society, of which he for many years was the presiding officer and its element of success. During the last few years of his life, although he had become afflicted with rheumatism and other disorders, he added many interesting numbers to his already valuable publications that have not only served readers among the populous, but the country in which he lived and fought, and d. on Monday morning, Oct. 17, 1886. [Pamphlet on Col. Chas. Whittlesey.]

Col. Whittlesey was m. Oct. 4, 1858, to Mrs. Mary E. (Lyon) Morgan, of Oswego, N. Y., who was b. Dec. 24, 1814, dau. of James Lyon, b. Apr. 12, 1787, Northumberland, Pa., d. [Annual Cyclopedia, Vol. XI, p. 706; Western Reserve Historical Society Pamphlet.] Miss Mary E. Lyon m. (1) Col. Theophilus Morgan (Theophilus, Theophilus, Theophilus, John, James Morgan). Col. Morgan was an honored citizen of Oswego. They had one son, James Sherman, a very promising young man, who was killed, in 1864, in a desperate cavalry charge in which he was lieutenant in Sherman's march to the sea.

The list of Col. Whittlesey's publications number one hundred and ninety-one: historical, archæological, geological, biographical, scientific, and religious. His pastor, Rev. Dr. Hayden, testifies: "He had no patience with materialism, but in his nature strength of mind had harmonized the facts of science with the truths of religion."

Other children of Asaph and Vesta (Hart) Whittlesey were:

694+Samuel Hart, b. Feb. 11, 1811; m. Melissa Selby.
Six infant children, b. between the years 1813 and 1820.

The following letters were first published in one of Col. Charles Whittlesey's pamphlets.

Fragment of partially destroyed letter written from Canfield, Mahoning County, in June or July, 1813, to some friend at Southington, Conn., by Vesta Hart Whittlesey:

In some way, Mr. W. knows not how, he got us all out before any assistance could be had. We had concluded we could not live five minutes longer. This scene of distress you cannot, indeed, I hope you will not try to, realize. We thought for sometime my darling Samuel was dead, and pried open his mouth, blowing into his nostrils. In a few minutes he recovered. I suppose he was smothered. We were scarcely able to breath ourselves, and Samuel was under me, but was only a little hurt. Sophia hurt the side of her face and her arm. I was very badly bruised in at least twenty places, and could not walk for three days without assistance. When Samuel recovered I fainted several times. We had no lights and there was no water, except that which was muddy, which they threw in my face. It was with the greatest difficulty I could . . .

Letter from Vesta Whittlesey to Hannah (Clark) Hart, Southington, Conn.:

TALLMADGE, July 28, 1813.

Dear Grandmother:

Through the goodness of God, we have at length arrived at our place of abode, and are pretty well settled. . . .

I have not been homesick at all since we have been here, although I was quite so on the road, in the State of Pennsylvania; but it would be finding fault with Providence to complain or be uneasy after receiving such special favors at His hands. You have probably heard through a letter of Mr. Whittlesey of our misfortunes on the road. I think we should not have survived five minutes longer. My feelings cannot be described, and I cannot think without tears. . . .

I have not yet recovered from my hurt, and never expect to. Our children had the chicken-pox since we came here, four weeks ago; but are better now. I visit Connecticut almost nightly in my dreams, which is some satisfaction. But, I tell you, I am better pleased with the place than I expected, though you may think it flattery; but it is not. Our nearest neighbor south is about a quarter of a mile, — the most kind, obliging, and Christian people I ever saw. Their name is Kilbourn (George Kilbourn and Almira, his wife). Our house is comfortable, but is not furnished. We expect to do it after harvest. . . .

As to provisions, we do very well. They had prepared flour from five bushels of excellent wheat; a keg of maple sugar; nearly a barrel of pork; lard, butter, soap, vinegar; a cow, and all things necessary. It was strange to see the rejoicing there appeared to be on our arrival. One sent me some dried pumpkin; another milk, berries, and so on. Sophia Kilbourn has helped me just when I needed help, and is the finest of girls. As to neighbors and acquaintances, I have a most agreeable circle; and I find many who were acquainted with you all. I had a number of tea parties, and yesterday afternoon we had Mr. George Kilbourn and wife, Ephriam Clark and wife, Judge Norton and wife, Mr. Woodruff, a missionary from Litchfield, Conn., and Sophia Kilbourn. You will perhaps smilingly ask how I entertain them. Very well. Our floors are good white wood boards; our table is a borrowed one, so small that only four or five can sit at it at a time; but I take up a board of the right length from my chamber floor, put it on the table, and cover with a cloth. My china becomes it very well, and we have excellent meals, most frequently relished after a blessing. We have had preaching three Sabbaths since we came and two lectures, and a conference at Mr. Clark's every Sabbath after meeting. There have been four different priests to visit us, and week before last we attended a wedding — the Rev. John Seward to Miss Harriet Wright, daughter of Esquire Wright, formerly of Canaan. There were about thirty present, and but one or two were not dressed in silk or cambric. As to the quantity of land cleared within sight of our house, there are about thirty acres, including the center and a lot Asaph has cut, but not yet logged. They have cleared four acres in front of our house, and, by going four or five rods, we can see four houses, all within three-quarters of a mile. . . .

We are now harvesting wheat, of which we had a good crop, and are cutting away the dry trees from our home lot, in order to set out apple trees this fall. I can give no one wishing to come here encouragement about good roads, for I think there can be no worse ones anywhere than from the eastern side of the Alleghanies to this place. As to the country, I can give every encouragement. The timber is large, tall, and straight. It is said an ox team is best to move it with; but, coming only to see the country, the cheapest and nearly as speedy way is to come on foot, and by the northern route. . . .

310. Elisha (John[123]), b. Oct. 19, 1783, in Washington, Conn. When he was nine years old, 1792, his parents removed to Salisbury,

Conn., where his boyhood was spent on a farm; during the school terms he went to Danbury, Conn., public schools; while there, did chores to pay for his board. He afterwards studied law in the office of his brother, Matthew Beale Whittlesey[303], in Danbury, and early qualified himself for the practice of law. He was admitted to the bar of Fairfield county court, also opened an office in New Milford, Conn., in 1805; Jan. 5, 1806, he m. Polly Mygatt, b. Jan. 8, 1787, in Danbury, Conn., dau. of Comfort Starr Mygatt and Polly, his wife. [Cothren, "History of Ancient Woodbury"; The Cogswell Family of America; Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biographies, Vol. VI; "Canfield in Early Times," by Dr. Jackson Truesdale, Canfield, Ohio.] June 3, 1806, Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey left Danbury, Conn., for the West, in a Jersey wagon with a good team of horses. Before leaving, the young bride asked her father for $50 with which to purchase, as they passed through New York, a new bonnet, some silverware, linen, etc. Mr. Mygatt replied by saying that she could have no use for such articles in the place where she was going, and as for table ware, all she would need would be two tin cups and as many pewter spoons with which to eat their mush and milk. But, all the same, Polly got her $50, but as to how it was spent history is silent. The morning after leaving Pittsburgh they were surprised to find darkness spreading over the land, to such an extent that for a time they thought best to put up. It was the total sun eclipse in June, 1806. They arrived in Canfield, Mahoning County, Ohio, June 27, 1806. Clients did not at first show up in abundance, therefore Mr. Whittlesey's first winter in Ohio, that of 1806/7, was spent in teaching school in the vicinity of the present so-called mud schoolhouse. The years of 1807 and 1808 were busy ones. The lot was cleared, a large house built, and Mr. Whittlesey's professional duties increased, he being public prosecutor for the entire Western Reserve. They removed from their cabin of two rooms to their new house, Oct. 27, 1808. Mr. Whittlesey was connected with the militia, and, in 1808, he was promoted to the captaincy, and, in 1810, was commissioned as aid-de-camp on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Wadsworth of the 4th Division Ohio Militia. On receipt of the news of Hull's surrender—the excitement produced by the first fire on Ft. Sumter was not a parallel one—Mr. Whittlesey closed his law books, dismissed his clients, and, the second day following, Maj.-Gen. Wadsworth, with Maj. Whittlesey for his aid, was on his way to Cleveland, escorted by a company of volunteer cavalry. Under the call of the President, Mr. Whittlesey received the appointment of Brigade Major in the Army of the Northwest under Gen. Harrison. In February, 1813, after Winchester's defeat, Maj. Whittlesey rode from Maumee Rapids to Chillicothe, one hundred and eighty miles, in three days and nights, with a message to the legislature then in session. The first part of the route from camp was made in the night through the famous "black swamp" which had been flooded and then frozen. As the water receded, large, irregular cakes of ice were left resting on the mud which obscured the trail through the woods. It was necessary to move at night for fear of Indian scouts. Before daylight fifteen miles had been passed, over ground that would generally be considered impassible. Towards the close of his service he became ill with camp-fever. Dr. Jackson Truesdale copied from the autobiography of Rev. Joseph Badger, who was a nurse in the Revolutionary army, the following: "Soon after the building of Ft. Meigs was commenced, the men began to be sick. Here Maj. E. Whittlesey was taken very sick. The general's tent was crowded. I took him into my own tent and took care of him night and day. He was given up to die by all except Dr. Stonard of the Virginia line and myself. The doctor understood the case. I carefully administered the prescriptions which were blessed for his recovery." Mr. Whittlesey returned to his home in March, 1813, reopened his office, and resumed the quieter pursuits of his profession. He was a member of the Ohio State House of Representatives in 1820 and 1821. In 1822, Mr. Whittlesey was first elected a member of Congress, and continued as such up to 1838, when he resigned. As a useful and indefatigable legislator, Mr. Whittlesey had no superior in Congress. His whole time and study were directed to the furtherance of the public good. He never annoyed the House for the mere purpose of declamation. Was one of the founders of the Whig party and an ardent friend of Henry Clay. Mr. Whittlesey was made chairman of the Committee of Claims, one of the most responsible committees of the House. During the recesses of Congress he assisted his law partner in the firm of Whittlesey & Newton, Canfield, which firm was formed in 1821, and continued up to 1841. Stern integrity, benevolence, and morality are to be read in his features, and his whole life was a commentary and illustration of his physiognomy. Upon his retirement from Congress, Mr. Whittlesey resumed his law practice. In 1841, President Harrison appointed him

ELISHA AND POLLY (MYGATT) WHITTLESEY, No. 310, FROM PAINTINGS

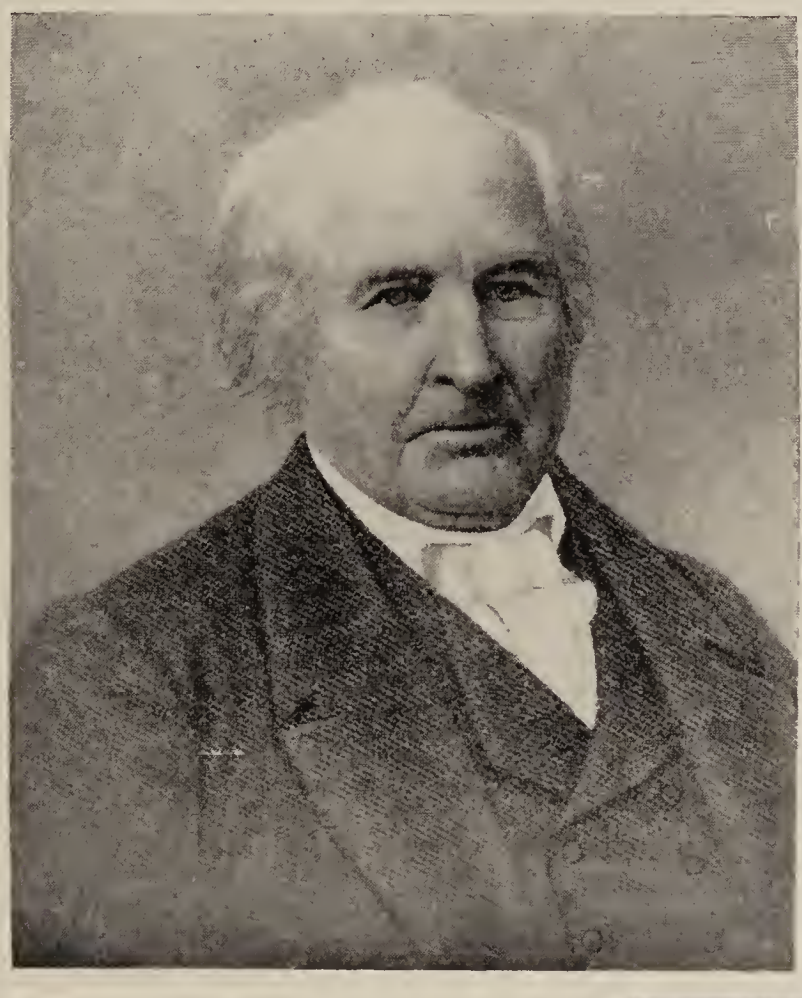
Auditor for the Treasury for the Post-office Department. He resigned the auditorship in September, 1843, returning to Canfield, and to his practice at law. In 1847, he was appointed general agent of the Washington Monumental Association. In May, 1849, President



ELISHA WHITTLESEY, No. 310, AND HIS HOME AT CANFIELD, OHIO

Taylor appointed Mr. Whittlesey first Comptroller of the United States Treasury, whereupon he resigned his connection with the Monument Association. At the beginning of Pierce's administration of the Presidency he resigned from the Comptrollership of the Treasury; but Mr. Pierce refused to accept his resignation, and at his earnest request he continued in the office to the close of President Pierce's administration. Mr. Whittlesey returned to Canfield in 1857; he did not resume his law practice. In 1861, he was re-appointed first Comptroller of the U. S. Treasury by President Lincoln. Mr. Whittlesey was known as the "watch dog of the treasury," and held office until his death, which occurred Jan. 7, 1863. Mrs. Whittlesey d. June 11, 1855.

Nov. 23, 1803. Mr. Whittlesey commenced business in Lenox, Mass., as a merchant, but soon removed to the house and farm of Dr. Smalley, where he continued through life. For many years he was a member of the Hartford County Agricultural Society, and was generally on some committee to award premiums. He was justice of the peace and a representative to the Legislature of Connecticut. The cause of common schools had no truer friend. He spent much time for many years in examining teachers and visiting schools, and advocated a system of graded schools long before it was adopted or generally discussed in Connecticut. He was a rigid disciplinarian in the school and family, his firm government always demanding and securing obedience. This, together with his consistent example and the cheerful piety of his wife, was the principal means of the early and hopeful conversion of his ten children. He united with the Congregational Church of New Britain, Conn., Rev. John Smalley, D.D., being the pastor, Oct. 13, 1805, and from 1807, was one of the church deacons for forty-four years. He led the church singing for many years, and was the superintendent of the first Sunday-school organized in the county, May, 1816. [Whittlesey Memorials, 1855.] He headed the list of temperance and anti-slavery societies, and was a most successful, intelligent, and public-spirited man. His piety was not noisy, but always the same. He bore years of suffering from a cancer with fortitude and cheerful submission, and departed from this life July 21, 1851, aged 76, Mrs. Whittlesey having died Jan. 8, 1838. [Andrews, "History of New Britain, Conn."]

Campbell-Whittlesey House

The Campbell-Whittlesey house, located on the corner of Troup and Fitzhugh streets in Rochester, N. Y., was erected by Benjamin Campbell, merchant miller, in 1835 and completed in 1836. The architect was believed to be either Mr. Campbell's father or Hugh Hastings of Hartford, Conn. The design is of Greek Revival architecture. The property was purchased by Thomas Rochester in 1842 and later by Miss Anna Louise Whittlesey[780], daughter of Chancellor Frederick Whittlesey[337], and more recently by Miss Mary Oliver[1751] of Rochester, N. Y., until it was taken (1934) into custody by The Society for the Preservation of Landmarks in Western New York. This historic house was the home of Chancellor Frederick Whittlesey and his family and was the scene of much social life. In its spacious cellar amateur dramatics held sway. Many of the rooms have been restored and furnished with many beautiful historic pieces.

Mr. Whittlesey was justice of the peace, county commissioner, and in 1832 and 1833 a member of the General Assembly of Connecticut. His character and the respect in which he was held are reflected in the following extract of an obituary which appeared Nov. 8, 1883, in the Congregationalist of Boston, Mass.:

> David C. Whittlesey, on the morning of October 13th, was called to rest, aged 80 years. For many years Mr. Whittlesey has been one of the prominent men in Litchfield county, and his death deserves more than passing notice. In the earthly career of this venerable man there are no materials for an exciting biography. But there is the power of a single, earnest, considerate life. It was a life that speaks to us by its sincerity and truthfulness. His strict honesty and accurate knowledge of men and affairs gave him a wide and favorable acquaintance in the State. As a student of men and business, he had, perhaps, few superiors; he was known as a man without guile. Anything like compromise with wrong, shrewd and unmanly tricks, instead of straightforward methods of accomplishing certain ends, were abhorrent to all the delicate sensibilities of his moral and spiritual being. His religious views were the result of much thought and careful inquiry. Whatever was good in him in spirit and act was the outcome of principle, not impulse. A deep, genuine abiding principle controlled him. In all the relations of life he was faithful. He has left the record of an earnest Christian, a tender and loving husband and father, a faithful friend, a sympathizing neighbor. His memory lingers with precious fragrance in the hearts of the people with whom he lived, and especially the hearts of his kindred. While he abode in the flesh, he strove to walk with God; and now "he is not, for God took him."

Gen. Whittelsey[824] devoted much of his leisure time during several years next prior to his decease in collecting information and writing up the family history, published in 1855, which has proved invaluable to the compiler. Those who went through the labors of procuring and arranging details of the first genealogy could appreciate the patience and perseverance necessary to such a work. His corps commander is the author of an eulogy published in the Detroit Post, from which the following is extracted:

> The press telegrams from Washington announce the death of General H. M. Whittelsey in the United States military hospital near that city. To those who lived in Detroit twelve years ago, General Whittelsey was well known as among the foremost young men in most public enterprises — in the Young Men's Society, in the fire department, in the military organizations, and in educational interests generally. Few among us were more esteemed for high intellectual and social qualities. In the summer of 1861 he left the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Wayne to accept an appointment as assistant quartermaster of the volunteers, with the rank of captain in the United States army. He served through the war with fidelity and conscientiousness of duty unsurpassed in his department of service. During all the years of the war he was the custodian of millions of public money and public property. So conscientious in the discharge of even minor duties of office; so punctilious in the discharge of all social courtesies; a friend so loving, generous, and noble, a man so full of the attributes of honor and honesty, the writer may be permitted to repeat of him, with a deep feeling, the trite quotation:
> None knew him but to love him,
> None named him but to praise.
> Detroit, Aug. 12, 1873.

825 Charles Augustus, b. at Hartford, Conn., Oct. 20, 1823. At the time of his father's sudden death (1842) he thought it best to leave his studies and follow a more active life. At that time to obtain a position on one of the great merchant ships of New York was considered a great favor. He went on several voyages — one to Calcutta, two or three to China, and one to Rotterdam. He was appointed navigator of the William G. Hackstaff, bound for California. The guards of the ship were low, and, in giving some order to furl in sail in a storm, he himself was washed overboard, Feb. 7, 1849.

His health failing, he made a short tour abroad — in England, Scotland, and the continent. On his return he spent seven years as acting pastor in Ripon, Wis., and Lyons, Iowa. Then he resided in Hartford, Conn., and engaged in preaching and literary work. Mrs. Curtis possesses a soul of fidelity, courage, religious strength, and devotion that has few equals. 873 *Ebenezer Tracy, b. at Middletown, Conn., Oct. 24, 1824. Graduated at Wesleyan Seminary, Aug., 1843; read law with Jonathan Barnes, Esq., 1845. He visited South America and remained there and in the West until 1848, when, as purser of mail steamer via Cape Horn, he visited California and remained in business in San Francisco until the fall of 1854; 1854 he returned to the States; 1855 practised law in Superior City, Wis.; 1860 returned to Ypsilanti. Oct., 1861, commissioned by Gov. Blair, First Lieutenant, Company D, 1st Michigan Infantry. His memory was wonderfully tenacious; he was a perfect gentleman and scholar. Was promoted to adjutant Jan., 1862, and captain, Company B, May 5, 1862, successively, and was killed at the second battle of Bull Run. He was known to spend days and weeks, while only expecting a commission, in the closest study of the dryest tactics and military strategy, while his collection of maps and war memoranda was unrivaled. Fearless and full of enthusiasm, he was leader of his company in battle. One occasion, being thirty paces in front of his company, under a crushing fire, he was forcibly pulled back by his orderly, who claimed that place as his by the rules of the service. His death must have been instantaneous. He was nine times in battle and under fire; the tenth brought him a soldier's grave on rebel soil, the side of his head being shot away with grapeshot. The following are some extracts from his letters:

"Since we have been before and behind Richmond there has been no lack of incident and excitement. I can now say that I know practically something of war, about which I have theorized so long. I have been shot at, and that tells all a captain can see or say."

"July 1. After the battle of Malvern Hill commenced with the artillery duel, we were formed in a double column, marched into a wheat field, made to lie down under a scorching sun, in a little hollow between two low hills. We could see nothing a hundred yards from us in any direction, and there we had to enjoy the "Gaudia Cerlaminis"—over the left. For four long hours round shot, grape, shell, and canister went plunging over and around into us, and we powerless. Enfilades from the right and left of us at that. The boys stood it, or laid at it, like Trojans. Not a man moved unless hit. In my own company a fragment of a shell fell with a peculiar heavy dead thud on the man next beyond me. I ordered him to the rear. Leaving his musket he limped away, as I thought, badly hurt. In twenty minutes he came back with a steady Indian lope, and lying down beside me said to me in a low tone, 'It didn't go through, Cap'n.' A grapeshot struck the head of another of my men. He went to the rear with a bloody poll, and was back again in ten minutes cracking jokes about the thickness of his skull. . . . At length came the order to go the front. I wish you could have seen our line as we rose the crest of the hill and went over a Pennsylvania regiment, straight as a ramrod and steady as a railway train. I forgot everything in my pride at our steadiness. Well, we went in and did our duty." He lost his life Aug. 30, 1862.

MEMORANDA

The following is from a New Haven daily paper, published the morning after Mr. Whittelsey's death:

Mr. Charles Bryan Whittelsey was a deacon in the Center Church, and probably adorned that station as much as any man that ever filled it. His life has been its own eulogy, and his whole character has doubtless been fully appreciated by the community, except perhaps in one particular. Though regarded as an enterprising business man, his intellectual powers were of a higher order than some of his fellow-citizens may suppose, and in this respect would have adorned almost any station. Those who have come in close contact with his mind, or heard him speak on any important occasion, or even the efforts of his pen, knew that he was a very able man; but he was quiet, unostentatious in his deportment, and chiefly exercised his talents in the promotion of the interests of his business and the prosperity of his church. But he was not unmindful of the public welfare, and was always ready to discharge every duty which he owed as a citizen.

As a man and a Christian, we believe that we shall not be regarded as using the language of overwrought eulogy when we say that Mr. Whittelsey, so far as the human eye could discover, was worthy of imitation in all the relations of life. We learned that he died a most triumphant death, clearly illustrating the power of his faith to bear him even joyfully through the darkness which ever hangs so fearfully between the mortal and spiritual world.

Mrs. Whittelsey d. Aug. 19, 1877, in Peublo, Col. Her body was brought to Brooklyn and interred in the family plot in Greenwood Cemetery. Mr. Whittelsey had three short terms of service in the Civil War. He went to the war at the first call of arms in the spring of 1861, as a member of Company A, 71st Regiment, New York State national guard, on the first three-months' call as a private. Participated in the first battle of Bull Run, the regiment going into the battle from choice, after its term of enlistment had expired. It lost heavily. It was in General Burnside's brigade, which was the first brigade to take position on the field that morning. Later in the day, the regiment was ordered alone to the most advanced position on the field. It was there exposed to the artillery fire of the enemy (who had stopped in their retreat upon learning that a fresh army was close at hand), and stood facing the approach of the enemy's reinforcements under General Beauregard. There it remained (after its line of support had melted away) until the enemy were within five hundred yards of it, when word came from General McDowell, ordering the regiment to retire from the field, which it did in perfect order in line of battle, in common time—not one man running. It was the last regiment on the field. This action of the 71st Regiment was specially mentioned by the Richmond, Va., papers in their accounts of the battle, one of them publishing a map of the field of battle in which the position of the "N. Y. 71st" was conspicuously shown. Its behavior during the battle was also favorably mentioned in the Illustrated London News of Aug. 31, 1861. Mr. Whittelsey served again with the 71st Regiment on the second three-months emergency call in 1862, as a sergeant, came back a lieutenant. The regiment occupied one of the outposts for the defense of Washington, most of the time. No fighting this time, but it was often expected. Again went to the front with the 71st regiment, as a lieutenant, on the third three-months emergency call in 1863, occasioned by the invasion of Pennsylvania by General Lee. This term was nothing but hard work, long marches, often in stormy weather, and skirmishes. The regiment was under fire on three different occasions, from the advanced forces of the enemy which it helped to check. Upon the defeat of General Lee at Gettysburg, the whole force of which the 71st formed a component part, was ordered to cut off his retreat by the occupation of the mountain passes or gaps. It marched by forced marches along the mountain ridge from gap to gap, until word came at last that he with his army (or what was left of it) had escaped. It then made reconnoisances and done duty in Maryland, during the balance of its service. He was a member of Company A, 71st Regiment, New York State National Guard, for nine years. Date of discharge, Apr. 25, 1870. In politics he was an Independent Republican. He d. Sept. 2, 1898, Brooklyn, N. Y.

481. Eliza Sterling (Mehetable[193]), b. at Saybrook, Conn., July 18, 1799; m. at Honeoye Falls, N. Y., Mar. 21, 1821, *Rev. Joseph Badger, b. 1790, at Gilmanton, N. H., son of Maj. Peaslee Badger and Lydia Kelly. Rev. Joseph Badger was the distinguished clergyman who emigrated from New Hampshire in 1816 and founded over two hundred liberal churches in western New York before 1830, by taking no name except that of "Christians." His father, Major Peaslee Badger of Gilmanton, N. H., was son of Gen. Joseph Badger, who commanded New Hampshire militia at Bennington at the capture of Burgoyne, and whose brigade, after the battle, was detailed to conduct Burgoyne and the 8,000 prisoners there taken, to Boston, where they were long imprisoned. The general was prominent in the Revolution from its origin, being colonel 10th New Hampshire Regiment before the war and the first magistrate elected in his native county, which he represented in the provincial congress, and also in the state convention which adopted the constitution of the United States. Those who have read Harriet Beecher Stowe's famous story, "Old Town Folks," will recall the central old homestead of Deacon Joseph Badger and his noble wife as the two leading types of New England character; also the son William for whom so many prayers and sacrifices were made to send him through Harvard College. Rev. Mr. Badger d. at Honeoye Falls, N. Y., May 12, 1852. Mrs. Elizabeth Badger d. at Honeoye Falls, N. Y., 1864.

Mr. Badger published many pieces in prose and verse, and wrote for the Home Journal and other papers. In 1861 he entered the ranks as private in the 71st Regiment of New York, and marched across Maryland to Washington. In May, 1862, he recruited a company of infantry, 105 men, at his own expense, was commissioned its captain and assigned to the "Stanton Legion," 145th Regiment New York volunteers. His company saved the "colors" in the terrible defeat of Chancellorville, where they lost one-fourth of their number, and afterward bore them safely through Gettysburg, and many other terrible battles. Its first baptism of blood was at Chancellorsville in May, 1863, which was followed by the long march in summer heat to Gettysburg in July of that year; in both battles the regiment was hotly engaged and suffered severely, being in the 12th Army Corps. A spontaneous fire from this regiment killed two of "Stonewall" Jackson's guard and gave Jackson his death-wound, from which he died within a week. The next morning at daylight Jackson's Corps of 30,000 men, as if to avenge his fall, advanced with terrific force against our 3d and 12th Corps, amounting together to less than Jackson's force; a fearful slaughter ensued until noon, when we had to yield to the line and fall back to Hooker's headquarters at Chancellorville House. The 20th Connecticut and 145th New York were the last regiments to fall back. Capt. Badger and his second lieutenant were the last two officers to leave that line. Capt. Badger served faithfully through the entire war, in the thickest of the battles. In November, 1865, he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of the 145th New York Volunteers, and returned to his law practice in New York City. 495. Orramel (John[201]), b. Nov. 1, 1801, in Salem, Conn., on the farm belonging to his father, where he spent his youth under the strict discipline of Rev. John, developing his education and talents for music after his day's work was done. He, with his brothers John and Henry, became very proficient in music and by experiments fast made improvements on their first crude piano, and started in the manufacture of instruments for which they soon found a market. See illustration following No. 201. On Jan. 1, 1826, in Salem, Conn., Orramel m. Charlotte Maconda Morgan, b. in Salem, Conn., July 4, 1805, and went to Buffalo, N. Y., to reside, where they remained three years. The piano manufacture was then in its infancy and the workmanship, including the sawing of the ivories and inlaying of the mother-of-pearl letters and ornaments, was done entirely by hand. The pianos were usually of rosewood or mahogany. Orramel Whittlesey represented the town of Salem in the General Assembly in 1832; he was also Justice of the Peace, Postmaster, and State Senator. In 1839, he established and opened the academy of music in Salem, Conn., so well known throughout New England and the South, as "Music Vale," the first conservatory of music of New England, where instruction was given in notation, thorough bass, harmony, and the general laws of composition, counterpart, and fugue. Voice culture and lessons on the organ, harp, and guitar were given as well as the pianoforte. At one time the school numbered as high as eighty pupils, coming from widely remote parts such as the Carolinas, Kentucky, Kansas, Nova Scotia, and the West Indies; thirty was the average number of boarders. Dr. Lowell Mason and George F. Root of

of the building, foretold the end of "Music Vale." Although another edifice was erected near the site of the old one, it did not prosper, and during the seventies was closed and sold. Tuesday, Mar. 16, 1897, "Music Vale" burned to the ground in spite of the hard work of the villagers to save this historic building. Mrs. Charlotte Maconda Whittlesey d. July 26, 1865, in Jersey City. The following is copied from a local paper:

> By the death of Mrs. Orramel Whittlesey the community of Salem and the Seminary of Young Ladies, with which she has been so long connected, have lost a most valued friend and counselor. Few women have ever so completely gained the confidence and affection of all those with whom they were associated as she. A model Christian woman, constant, yet unobtrusive in her deeds of kindness and charity, she never by word or deed offended the perfect law of life. Not one of the many pupils who have learned to regard her as a second mother but will sincerely grieve to learn of her death, while to those who were bound to her by the ties of kindred the loss is irreparable.

In Mr. Whittlesey's early days, when educational advantages were few, his craving for learning would not be suppressed, and after absorbing all the common schools afforded, he educated himself. He began to teach in 1841; he spent five years teaching in the public or district schools, and in 1847 was induced to establish a private school in the village, to which he gave the name of Waramaug Academy, in which he continued to teach until his sixty-seventh year. On Mr. Whittlesey's seventy-second anniversary he was surprised by 150 of his former pupils calling on him and presenting him with a handsome purse and many tokens of their esteem for his worthy services. Those who could not be present sent letters and gifts. The toasts were: "Our Teacher," by H. Hoffman; "Fun at School," by E. H. Beardsley. As a teacher he sent forth fathers, mothers, sons, daughters, and grandchildren from the same seats and desks. He was an ardent lover of Shakespeare's works, and lived for more than fifty years in the house built by Major Cogswell, where General Washington stopped with his soldiers. This house descended in the family to Mrs. Whittlesey. The bar over which the grogs and steaming toddies were passed has been converted into a cupboard, and the "public room" is now the neat little living room of the occupants. (See memoranda No. 124.) Mr. Whittlesey served as school visitor for twenty years, justice of the peace, and Representative in the Connecticut Legislature in 1882; he was a collector of Whittlesey family records for many years, and in the Eliphalet branch of the family he had the most complete records unpublished, from which he generously contributed toward the completion of this work. The last day's battle of the Wilderness was under the command of Col. Kellogg. The regiment was disposed in three lines, under Majors Hubbard, Rice, and Ellis, and advanced in that order, the objective point being the heavy earthworks defended by Longstreet's veterans. [Col. Charles Whittlesey's records; personal account.] It passed at double-quick time to the first line, capturing and sending to the rear over 300 prisoners. Forward again at double quick the regiment went, with intervals of less than one hundred yards between the battalions, to and through a stiff abatis, within twenty yards of the enemy's line, when it met a most destructive fire from both its front and left flanks. But they pressed on, some even to the top of the main line of earthworks. Nothing, however, could withstand the murderous fire that met them, and the first and second batteries crept back to the somewhat less exposed position held by the third, but leaving on the field 323 of Litchfield's bravest sons, twelve of them dead or mortally wounded,—a record unsurpassed by the Union army during the war. For fourteen years past Mr. Whittlesey has been a sufferer under paralysis; hence his withdrawal from active life has made him a stranger to the thousands who, in that time, have flocked into this city. Mr. Whittlesey graduated from Yale College, studied law in Connecticut, and subsequently spent one year in the law office of Hon. Elisha Whittlesey[310] at Canfield, then in Trumbull co. In 1827 the deceased removed to Lorain co., and opened a law office at Elyria, immediately rising to prominence and distinction in his profession. He was soon called upon to represent the people in both branches of the legislature, and distinguished himself as a prompt, upright, and industrious representative. Especially, when filling the chair, his dignity, decision, and familiarity with parliamentary rules won the admiration of the legislature, and to Mr. Whittlesey are we indebted for some of the most clear, explicit, and valuable laws now upon our statute-book. For a short time Mr. Whittlesey was editor of the Ohio Atlas, the Whig organ of Lorain co. In 1834 Mr. Whittlesey removed to Cleveland, Ohio, engaging in the practice of his profession, but soon retiring from it, however, to engage in the more congenial pursuit of farming and horticulture. In 1836, in conjunction with Col. Charles Whittlesey[693], he purchased this paper, and for about two years the deceased was the principal editor, enriching its columns by his vigorous and accomplished mind. For a number of years Mr. Whittlesey was one of the associate judges of this county, and, owing to the crowded state of the docket, he much of the time performed the duties of presiding judge, and most satisfactorily to the bar and the public. From the bench Mr. Whittlesey was appointed clerk of the Cuyahoga Court of Common Pleas, and, although then suffering under paralysis, he performed the duties for the constitutional term of seven years. Mr. Whittlesey was a gentleman of decided ability, a man of uncommon intelligence, and of very general and varied information. As a friend and neighbor, he secured the respect and esteem of all who knew him, and as an upright, honest, Christian man his memory is blessed. Through the long years in which he has been an almost helpless invalid, cheerfulness, resignation, and patience have adorned his character, and, as death gradually drew around its curtain, our friend looked upon the fading light of life as the soft twilight of a beauteous summer day. We will not disturb the sanctity of that chamber where this "good man met his fate," but must be permitted to record a message left for an absent friend just before dissolution, when paralysis for a few hours left unfettered his powers of speech. "Tell him," said this dying man, "that I bear evidence of the supporting realities of the Christian religion."

1446 *William Beale, b. Oct. 2, 1841, at Marietta, Ohio; graduated at Marietta College in 1861; law student; killed in the battle of Mission Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Nov. 25, 1863. The following sketch, taken from an Ohio paper, tells of his noble career: "Capt. Wm. Beale Whittlesey, whose early death is mourned by so many in this vicinity, was b. in Marietta, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1841, and graduated with honor to himself at the college in this place in 1861. When the call was made to raise the 92d Reg't, in the summer of 1862, he offered himself as a volunteer, and was appointed to a second lieutenancy, not yet twenty-one years of age, but not without serious doubts and misgivings on the part of some that one so young and inexperienced should be given such a command. Whittlesey, however, had entered into this great work with all the enthusiasm of his ardent nature, and his character was now rapidly to be developed into a strong manhood under the discipline of the thorough education which he had received. He soon proved himself to be the most efficient officer in the enlistment, organization, and drill of his company, making it, what it subsequently proved to be, one of the best, if not the first, company in the regiment. He seemed to understand from the outset what the spirit and duties of a soldier were, knowing what it was to yield implicit and unquestioning obedience to his superior officers and to assume at once all the difficulties and trials of a soldier's life. Although the camp for two or three months was scarcely a mile from his father's house, yet he refused all solicitations to spend a night under the paternal roof. He had identified himself thoroughly with his men, and would not set an example which they might not follow or indulge in what was forbidden to them. Subsequently, when the regiment was ordered into service, he charged his mother, in case of his being sick, not to send for him under any circumstances. He had given himself wholly to the cause, and would abide all its results. In a letter written from the battlefield at a later period, he said: 'If I fall in this conflict, I do not regret the step I have taken.' His life and all was consecrated to the work. His sterling merits as an officer were very soon recognized, for they could not be hid, and six months had hardly elapsed before Whittlesey was promoted to a first lieutenancy in another company; before the close of a week to the captaincy of his own company, made vacant by the resignation of Captain Thorinley. He had been from the beginning the ruling spirit of the company, upon whom the main reliance had been placed, and there were none now to question the fitness and wisdom of his being placed in the chief command. It is a circumstance worthy of mentioning here to find to what an extent the leading officers of the 92d Reg't were young men,—very young, and Marietta College Boys. They soon proved themselves to be men of full stature, rising rapidly to honor, and making the regiment a very effective one in the service. Soon after the organization of the regiment it was moved to the Kanawha, in Western Virginia, where it remained until January, when it was ordered into Tennessee to reinforce the Army of the Cumberland. It suffered severely for a time from sickness, and became greatly reduced; but it bore its part in the action at Hovey's Gap, in July, when the army advanced from Murfreesboro and drove the enemy from the strong line of entrenchments, thereby securing possession of Tennessee. It was a part of Thomas' corps in the desperate fight of Chicamauga, doing most gallant service in that action. The same regiment was selected, among a few others, to perform that most important and dangerous service when Brown's Ferry, below Lookout Mountain, was secured, which opened our communication with Bridgeport and saved the Army of the Cumberland from the necessity of abandoning Chattanooga, which they could have held but a little longer for want of supplies. The last action in which the regiment was engaged was that deadly assault by which they carried Mission Ridge, at the battle of Chattanooga, and took possession of the headquarters of the rebel army. Prisoners there taken state that General Bragg had ridiculed the idea of our soldiers attempting to scale those heights, a feat regarded by him as impossible; yet the gallant 92d was in the lead in that desperate undertaking, and here it was that the lamented Whittlesey fell, pierced through the heart. He had nearly attained the summit, when he was struck as he was reaching over to take a gun from a member of another company that he might perform some effective work with his own hands. He had only time to exclaim: 'Boys, I'm killed; but don't mind me. Go on!'—and fell dead. Lieut.-Col. Putnam, in command of the regiment, had fallen wounded a few moments before, and subsequently, at another point of the field, Adjutant Turner fell mortally wounded."

MEMORANDA

Russell Botsford Brownell, b. in Woodbury, Conn., Dec. 5, 1839, graduated at Marietta College, Ohio, June 7, 1861; studied medicine with Dr. Gustave Weber of Cleveland and at the Cleveland Medical College in 1862–63. Dr. Weber was at that time surgeon-general of Ohio, and he was on his staff before Vicksburg during the siege. Mr. Brownell graduated at the Bellevue Medical College in 1864; was house surgeon at Bellevue Hospital, and at the time of his death assistant professor at Bellevue Medical College. During these years he distinguished himself in his profession by his culture and his intense enthusiasm, often in his surgery performing remarkable operations, and in writing extensively for medical journals. The Hospital for the Ruptured and Crippled, on 42d Street, New York, absorbed much of his thought and efforts of his closing years. His health failing he engaged for six months as surgeon on the steamer Arago between New York and Havre. He said at one time, "It is a mystery why I should be laid aside, but perhaps it is God's way for me to bring to completion my hospital." He was an elegant gentleman, with a heart as grand as his manners, and from time to time being thrown in contact largely with the wealthy and generous he interested them in his project and had a large sum pledged for it at the time of his death. As a last resort in the fall of 1866, he went to Egypt and died on the River of the Nile near Edfou, Jan. 21, 1867, aged 28. He was buried in a tomb just outside of the walls of a Coptic Convent, three miles from the river, the tomb being one of many hewn out of solid rock, cut in horizontally. (The Coptics are descendants of the Egyptians, who were Christians before the rise of Mahommedism.) The convent stands at the foot of a detached portion of the Lybian Hills, being of yellow sandstone.

ASAPH WHITTLESEY, No. 698
This picture was taken during the 160-mile trip to the legislature in 1860.

698. Asaph (Asaph[309]), b. in Tallmadge, Ohio, May 18, 1826, where his childhood and youth were spent. About the year 1846 he joined with Henry B. Curtis in purchasing a team and wagon, which they drove to the northeastern part of Iowa. They bought a tract of land in Clayton county and commenced to cultivate it. The hermit life of this wilderness home was distasteful to one of his social qualities, and he soon after sold his interest to Mr. Curtis and returned to Tallmadge and bought the part of the Griswold farm now owned by John Norris and Richard Clayton. In 1850, removed to Peoria, Ill., and was m. Sept. 7, 1851, to Miss Lucy Maria Haskell. In June, 1854, Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey removed to La Pointe, Wis., and July of that year he made the first improvement upon the site of the now flourishing town of Ashland. He built the first log cabin and afterward the first house in the place (the latter still standing). He was the first postmaster and the first justice of the peace in Ashland. He was afterward elected judge of the county of Ashland. In 1860 he was elected a member of the legislature to represent the counties of Ashland, Burnett, Douglas, La Pointe, Polk, and St. Croix, and walked 160 miles from Ashland to the Capitol at Bayfield to take his seat in the Senate. In 1861 he was appointed by President Lincoln receiver of the United States land office at Bayfield, to which place he removed. He held this office until 1868 and then resigned to accept that of Indian agent, to which he had been appointed. The privations and hardships of the pioneer life in that new and cold region were severe; but they were borne by all the members of his estimable family with true heroism. The last six years of his life he was a great sufferer, which put to the test his patience and Christian resignation, as it did also the physical endurance of his heroic wife. Mr. Asaph Whittlesey d. at Bayfield, Wis., Dec. 15, 1879. Mrs. Whittlesey m. (2) Ira A. Richardson, and resided in Toledo, Ohio.

He was ordained about 1830, and installed with the promise of $450 yearly salary. At the time of the marriage of Miss Anna Whittlesey to Mr. Stratton, her father, the Hon. Elisha, gave them a comfortable house and barn with an orchard and several acres of land for pasturage, a cow, and a garden enclosed. In 1837 Mr. Stratton gave up the church until 1842, when he was called upon to supply the Congregational Church of Deerfield, Ohio. In 1866 removed to Warren, Ohio. intendent of Home Missions in Central and Southern Illinois, in which he continued for six years, residing in Jacksonville, Ill., where he rendered valuable service to the college as trustee, the trustees showing their appreciation of his scholarly abilities and his standing in the ministry by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Returning to his home in Ottawa, Ill., in 1881, he did not resume a pastorate, but by his wise and helpful counsels, and frequent preaching to destitute churches in the region and other ministerial labors, he rendered essential service to the kingdom of Christ. He never lost his interest in, or love for, the work of the Christian ministry, and to the last he delighted in proclaiming the great and beloved truths of Christ and His Gospel, which he found increasingly precious in his own personal experience. Dr. Whittlesey was scholarly, cultured, and studious. He loved his books and the companionship of the refined and educated. He was genial, sympathizing, and friendly. MEMORANDA

"The mission," says Mr. Meigs, "has sustained a great loss, and so has the cause of missions to the heathen."

Mr. Kendall, writing from Dindigul after the death of Mr. Whittelsey, says: "While he was with us he showed that his heart was deeply engaged in the missionary work. On one occasion, before he was confined to his bed, he remarked that he had not the least desire to leave the work in which he was engaged. He also said: 'I would much rather be a missionary in this dark land, pointing these ignorant heathen to Christ, than be in America enjoying the civilized and Christian country.' When it was manifest that our brother must soon leave us, he felt calm and composed in view of his change. He was evidently ready to say: 'Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done.'" [Missionary Herald, 1847, pp. 248 and 304.]

905. John (John Rossel [398]), b. July 1, 1838, at New York City; bank cashier, Northampton, Mass.; m. June 6, 1865, at Northampton, Mass., Laura Bridgman Wood, b. Apr. 29, 1839, dau. of Amasa and Laura (Bridgman) Wood of Northampton, Mass. "On the night of Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1876, seven masked men entered simultaneously the house of John Whittelsey, cashier of the Northampton National Bank, captured seven inmates of the house, bound and gagged them, and by force and torture obtained from the cashier the combination to the lock on the door of the bank and vault. They also took from the cashier his gold watch. Then, repairing to the bank, they entered the front door with the key they had taken from the cashier, and by means of the combination obtained from him opened the vault, and took therefrom money, bonds, certificates, and other securities of the face value of about one and a quarter millions of dollars. Of that amount $111,250 was the property of the bank, and the balance was the property of private depositors. The burglars locked the vault door when they left, and wrenched off the dial. An expert locksmith from New York was sent for to unlock the vault door, and it was not until about twenty hours after that the robbery was definitely known. The robbery was committed between the hours of four and six o'clock on the morning of the 26th, and the robbers left town immediately thereafter. On Feb. 14, 1877, Robert Scott and James Dunlap, well known to the police force of New York as professional bank robbers, were arrested in Philadelphia as the ringleaders in this robbery, and on the 17th of that month brought to Northampton and committed to the county jail. On the 22d and 23d of March they were examined in the Town Hall before Trial Justice Chilson, and bound over for trial in the Superior Court, in June, under bonds of five hundred thousand dollars each. After that time they remained in jail under constant special guard, both inside and outside of the jail premises. At the session of the grand jury, June 12th, Scott and Dunlap were indicted for breaking and entering Cashier Whittelsey's house and stealing his gold watch, and also for breaking and entering the bank and stealing money and securities therefrom. Monday, July 9th, the trial commenced, which lasted four days, and the jury, after being out two hours, returned a verdict of 'Guilty.' It was clearly proven that these men had been plotting this robbery with others since July, 1875. They had watched Mr. Whittelsey and his family for months. After they entered the house, they bound the occupants to bedposts, and, after an hour or two, gagged them. They were at the house from about twelve until four o'clock A.M., and then went to the bank. The burglars said that 'Mrs. Whittelsey was the coolest of the lot.' She attempted to assist her husband to dress after they were ordered up out of bed, but was not allowed to continue." [Hampshire Gazette, Northampton, Mass., Tuesday, July 17, 1877.] Mr. Whittelsey d. at Northampton, Mass., Nov. 30, 1894.

Attacks by the Daltons upon the Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, Elston C. Whittlesey[2107] being messenger in charge:

First Attack.

On the night of June 1, 1892, about 11 o'clock, six members of the Dalton gang of outlaws attacked the express and baggage car of the Wells, Fargo Company at Red Rock, Indian Territory, where the train had stopped for water. It was the same band of outlaws that subsequently made a raid upon a bank at Coffeeville, Kansas, and was nearly exterminated by citizens who came to the defense of the bank. In the affair at Red Rock, Mr. E. C. Whittlesey, the express messenger, had in his company as guard a young lad aged about 18 years. The outlaws first seized the engineer and fireman of the train and then demanded admittance to the express car, which was refused. The assailants then opened fire with revolvers upon both sides of the express car and also from underneath the floors. Fully two hundred shots were fired at the car, many of which penetrated the inside. The occupants of the cars shielded their persons behind trunks and boxes as best they could, and replied to the shots with their own weapons whenever they could determine the location of any of their adversaries. Finally, the marauders forced the fireman to cut a hole through one of the doors, he calling to the messenger and guard not to shoot him as he was acting under compulsion. When a sufficient opening was made the banditti began entering the car, holding their prisoner in front as a shield. Finding further resistance to be useless the messenger and his aid were obliged to witness the spoliation of their car. The safe was forced and about $400 in money stolen. At least $2,000 worth of property was destroyed besides what was carried away. The bandits were expecting to secure about $70,000 that was going into the Sac and Fox country for the purpose of paying Indian annuities. The treasure had passed through the day previous to their assault. Before leaving the train the robbers warned Mr. Whittlesey never to attempt resistance again as next time he would be shot down without mercy.

Second Attack.

About 1 o'clock, A. M. on June 10, 1893, a part of the same gang of free-booters made an attack upon Mr. Whittlesey's express car at Cimarron, Kansas, where the train halted for orders. The bandits took possession of the engine and express car and ran it along the track about a quarter of a mile to a point where their horses were tethered. The messenger was asleep, but was aroused from his slumber by a loud knocking and a demand for admittance, which was refused. On this occasion Mr. Whittlesey was alone in his car. Upon being refused entrance the outlaws opened a volley of shots. Mr. Whittlesey reached for his own weapon, and as he did so a bullet from the attacking party struck him two inches to the left of the navel, ranged upward and passed out of the back, having made a furrow seven and a half inches through the body. On being shot Mr. Whittlesey realized that he must soon surrender, so he expended what vitality he possessed in secreting the valuables he had in charge. There were three trunks containing money besides two express safes. The trunks and one safe were hidden under other trunks and boxes so as not to be seen on casual inspection. The other safe, which contained $1,000 in silver, was left in its regular place. When the bandits gained entrance they proceeded to demolish the safe and secured the silver. They found Mr. Whittlesey weltering in blood upon the floor. Before quitting the car one of the outlaws approached the wounded man and asked:

"Are you much hurt, pard?"

Mr. Whittlesey answered, "Yes, I guess I am done for."

"Well, I'm downright sorry, pard. We were after money, not blood."

With this remark he picked up the body of the wounded man and laid him tenderly upon the lounge, gave him a drink from the water-cooler near at hand and then followed his fellows into the outer darkness.

Mr. Whittlesey remained in his car, attended by the train crew which soon came to his relief, until an east-bound train was met, when he was transferred and returned to Kansas City. News of the daring raid had been wired, and a detail of police was found necessary to keep back the crowd which was anxious to catch a glimpse of the brave express messenger. The wounded man was off duty for seven months. He recovered slowly. The company sent him to several health resorts, one of them in Mexico. Although working in the office of the express company, Mr. Whittlesey has never entirely recovered from the effects of his nearly fatal wound. On the occasion of both these assaults and robberies the passengers on the trains were unmolested.

Apr. 5, 1825, in Stamford, Conn., son of Edward Maginnis, a pioneer leather merchant of New York; for some time foreman of New York Herald office and afterward proofreader; in 1849 engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Maginnis was among the first to respond to the call for volunteers in 1862; he was mustered in Company E, 18th Regiment, Connecticut Volunteers, Aug. 18, 1862, as second lieutenant; he was present at the unfortunate battle of Winchester, June 12-13, 1863, and was one of those who spent nine months in Libby Prison, where he suffered from cold, privation, and exposure, and contracted a cough from which he never recovered. He received a furlough on being released. While he was fighting at the front, Mrs. Maginnis, an ardent patriot, was active at home, as women could best aid the soldiers and serve the cause of the Union; restless at home, he returned to the front, and in the skirmish at Piedmont a minie-ball entered his temple, and he fell into the arms of a comrade, June 5, 1864. He was buried on the battlefield, and in 1865 his body was recovered and buried in Moss Wood Glen Cemetery at Music Vale. Mrs. Maginnis returned to Music Vale, for a number of years was vice-principal, and proved herself to be an able assistant, an indefatigable worker, eventually beyond her own strength. It was in personally nursing and carrying the sick that she suffered an injury causing her to be an invalid for twenty-five years, which she bore with a patient Christian spirit and fortitude. She collected in her home she called the "Little Red Cottage," more stuff, old and interesting, than can be found outside of a New England Historical Society, and prided herself on genealogical matters. Mrs. Maginnis d. at Salem, Conn., Wednesday, Aug. 4, 1897, greatly lamented.

2431. The following is a newspaper report of an award to Charles White Whittlesey:

Lieut. Col. (then Major) Charles W. Whittlesey, 308th Infantry—Awarded Nov. 22, 1918, presented in the United States.—For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty in action with the enemy northeast of Binarville in the Argonne Forest, Oct. 27, 1918. Although cut off for five days from the remainder of his division, Major Whittlesey maintained his position, which he had reached under orders received for an advance, and held his command, consisting originally of 463 officers and men of the 308th Infantry and Co. K of the 307th Infantry, together in the face of a superior number of the enemy during the five days. Major Whittlesey and his command were thus cut off and no rations or other supplies reached him in spite of determined efforts which were made by his division. In the fourth day Major Whittlesey received from the enemy a written proposition to surrender, which he treated with contempt, although he was at that time out of rations and had suffered a loss of about 50 per cent. of killed and wounded of his command and was surrounded by the enemy.

2143. Bela Lyon Pratt. As a boy he showed marked talent in the field of sculpture and, in spite of straitened circumstances due to the death of his father, managed, starting at the age of sixteen, to attend the Yale School of Fine Arts for three years; then the Art Students' League of New York, where Augustus St. Gaudens—greatest American sculptor of the period—was impressed by his work, and took him into his own studio. Armed with this experience, he went to Paris and won two medals and two prizes at the Ecole des Beaux Arts, under Chapu and Falguière. In 1892, aged 24, he was commissioned at St. Gaudens' suggestion to execute two colossal groups for the Chicago World's Fair, and returned from France to make them. Next year he started teaching sculpture at the School of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, which he helped to build up for twenty-five years, meanwhile winning himself a progressively greater reputation as a sculptor. Marrying one of his pupils, he went back to Paris with her. There his first son was born, and he won honorable mention in the 1898 Salon. Next year, returned to the United States, he received an honorary A.B. degree from Yale; to be followed years later (1915) by an honorary M.A. from Harvard. From the first, his great gift for modeling nude figures was apparent. His small nudes, done from 1900 on, as a relaxation from strenuous labors on monumental groups, have been the most prized of all his works, and many large museums own examples—such as the "River Nymph" (Metropolitan Art Museum, New York), and "Figure of a Young Girl" (Boston Art Museum). The delicate sensitivity of surface in these little figures, and their spiritual quality, are perhaps unique in American sculpture; but his enthusiasm for modeling them did not keep him from producing monuments, portraits, garden groups, etc. Among the most impressive of these are the heroic seated female figures of "Science" and "Art," which flank the main doorway of the Boston Public Library; the "Whaleman" in New Bedford, which depicts the powerful and concentrated form of a man poised to throw a harpoon; the portrait statue of Phillips Brooks at Boston, Mass. From 1903, when an emergency operation badly strained his heart, his health was always precarious, but preferring an active life, even if short, to that of an invalid, he made no concessions to his ailment and lived to accomplish an amazing amount of work—over 175 important commissions—before he finally died from his heart trouble on May 18, 1917.

Others among his most famous works of art: "Victory," for the battleship Massachusetts; Spanish War Memorial, St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H.; Statue of John Winthrop, New London, Conn.; Army Nurses Memorial group, State House, Boston; Nathan Hale on Yale campus, New Haven, Conn.; Edward Everett Hale on Boston Common; Nathaniel Hawthorne Memorial, Salem, Mass.; and Alexander Hamilton, Chicago, Ill. He also designed the $5. and $2.50 gold pieces put into circulation in 1918.
